00043814

NOT TO BE ISSUED OUT OF THE LIBRARY.

Digitized with financial assistance from the Government of Maharashtra
on 25 June, 2016

THE

WORKS

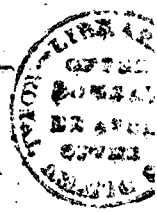
OF

ARTHUR MURPHY, Esq.

43814

IN SEVEN VOLUMES.

VOL. III.



LONDON:
PRINTED FOR T. CADELL,
IN THE STRAND.
M DCC LXXXVI.

322.6
MUR/WSR
43814

43814

00043814

CONTENTS

OF THE

THIRD VOLUME.

	Page.
THE WAY TO KEEP HIM, a Comedy -	5
ALL IN THE WRONG, a Comedy - -	203
THE DESERT ISLAND - - -	385

To Mrs. ABINGTON.

MADAM,

YOU will be ſurpriſed, at this diſtance of time, and in this public manner, to receive an anſwer to a very polite Letter, which you addreſſed to me in the courſe of the laſt Summer at Yarmouth. In a ſtrain of vivacity, which always belongs to you, you invite me to write again for the Stage. You tell me, that having gone through the Comedies of THE WAY TO KEEP HIM, ALL IN THE WRONG, and THREE WEEKS AFTER MARRIAGE, you now want more from the ſame hand. I am not bound, you ſay, by my reſolution, ſignified in a Prologue about ten years ago, to take my leave of the Dramatic Muſe. At the perjuries of Poets, as well as Lovers, Jove laughs; and the Public, you think, will be ready to give me a general releaſe from the promiſe. All this is very flattering. If the following Scenes, at the end of

Five

Five and Twenty years, ſtill continue to be a part of the public amuſement, I know to what cauſe I am to aſcribe it. Thoſe Graces of Action, with which you adorn whatever you undertake, have given to the Piece a degree of brilliancy, and even novelty, as often as you have repeated it. I am not unmindful of the Performers who firſt obtained for the Author the favour of the Town: a GARRICK, a YATES, a CIBBER, united their abilities; and who can forget MRS. CLIVE? They have all paſſed away, and the COMEDY might have paſſed with them, if you had not ſo frequently placed it in a conſpicuous light.

The truth is, without ſuch talents as yours, all that the Poet writes is a dead letter. He deſigns for repreſentation, but it is the Performer that gives to the draught, however juſtly traced, a form, a ſpirit, a countenance, and a mind. All this you have done for the WIDOW BELLMOUR; and that excellence in your art, which you are known to poſſeſs, can, no doubt, doubt, lend the ſame animation to any new Character. But alas! I have none to offer. That Tinder in the Poet's mind, which, as Doctor YOUNG ſays, takes fire from every ſpark, I have not found, even though you have endeavoured to kindle the flame. Could I write, as you can act, I ſhould be proud to obey your commands: but after a long diſuſe, how ſhall I recover the train of thinking neceſſary for plot, humour, incident, and character?

In the place of novelty, permit me to requeſt that the Way to Keep Him may be inſcribed to you. You are entitled to it, Madam; for your talents have made the Play your own. A Dedication, I grant, at this period of time, comes rather late; but being called upon for a new edition, I have retouched the Dialogue, and perhaps ſo reformed the whole, that, in it's preſent ſtate, it may be deemed leſs unworthy of your acceptance. It is, therefore, my wiſh, that this Addreſs may in future attend the Comedy, to remain (as long as ſuch a thing can remain) a tribute due to the GENIUS OF Mrs. ABINGTON, and a mark of that eſteem, with which I ſubſcribe myſelf,

Madam,

Your real Admirer,

And moſt obedient Servant,

LINCOLN'S-INN,
25th Nov. 1785.

ARTHUR MURPHY.

THE

WAY TO KEEP HIM:

A

COMEDY,

Performed at the

THEATRE ROYAL

IN

DRURY-LANE.

——Ut ameris, amabilis eſto:
Quod tibi non facies, ſolvave forma dabit.

OVID.

'Nam facit ipſa ſuis interdum fæmina factis,
Morigeriſque modis, et mundo corpore cultu,
Ut facile inſueſcat ſecum vir degere vitam.

PROLOGUE.

Spoken by Mr. HOLLAND.

WHEN firſt the haughty critic's dreadfull rage,
With Gothic fury, over-ran the ſtage,
Then PROLOGUES roſe, and ſtrove with varied art
To gain the ſoft acceſſes to the heart.
Thro' all the tuneful tribe th' infection flew,
And each GREAT GENIUS—his petition drew;
In formâ pauperis addreſs'd the pit,
With all the gay antitheſis of wit.
Their ſacred art poor poets own'd a crime;
They ſigh'd in ſimile; they bow'd in rhyme.
For charity they all were forc'd to beg;
And ev'ry Prologue was "a wooden leg."
Next theſe a hardy, manly race appear'd,
Who knew no dullneſs, and no critics fear'd.
From Nature's ſtore each curious tint they drew,
Then boldly held the piece to public view:
"Lo! here, exact proportion! juſt deſign!
"The bold relief! and the unerring line!
"Mark in ſoft union how the colours ſtrike!
"This, Sirs, you will, or this you ought to like."
They bid defiance to the foes of wit,
"Scatter'd like ratſbane up and down the pit."
Such prologues were of yore;—our bard to-night
Diſdains a falſe compaſſion to excite:
Nor too ſecure your judgment would oppoſe;
He packs no jury, AND HE DREADS NO FOES.
To govern here no party can expect;
An audience will preſerve its own reſpect.
To catch the foibles, that miſguide the fair,
From trifles ſpring, and end in laſting care,
Our author aims; nor this alone he tries,
But as freſh objects, and new manners riſe,
He bids his canvaſs glow with various dyes;

Where ſenſe and folly mix in dubious ſtrife,
Alternate riſe, and ſtruggle into life.
Judge if with art the mimic ſtrokes be blend;
If amicably light and ſhade contend;
The mental features if he trace with ſkill;
See the piece firſt; then DAMN it if you will.

Dramatis Perſonæ.

MEN.

LOVEMORE,	Mr. GARRICK.
SIR BASHFULL CONSTANT,	Mr. YATES.
SIR BRILLIANT FASHION,	Mr. PALMER.
WILLIAM, Serv. to LOVEMORE,	Mr. KING.
SIDEBOARD, Serv. to SIR BASH.	Mr. ACKMAN
POMPEY, a Black Boy, &c.

WOMEN.

The WIDOW BELLMOUR,	Mrs. CIBBER.
Mrs. LOVEMORE,	Mrs. YATES.
LADY CONSTANT,	Mrs. DAVIES.
MUSLIN, Maid to MRS. LOVEMORE,	Mrs. CLIVE.
MIGNIONET, Maid to the WIDOW.	Miſs BRADSHAW.
FURNISH, Maid to LADY CON-	Miſs HIPPISLEY.

THE WAY TO KEEP HIM.

ACT the FIRST.

Scene, an APARTMENT in LOVEMORE'S HOUSE:

WILLIAM and SIDEBOARD, discovered at a Game of Cards.

WILLIAM.

A PLAGUE go with it! I have turned out my game: Is forty ſeven good?

SIDEBOARD.

Equal.

WILLIAM.

Confound the cards! tierce to a queen?

SIDEBOARD.

Equal.

WILLIAM.

There again! ruined, ſtock and block: nothing can ſave me. I don't believe there is a footman in England plays with worſe luck than myſelf. Four aces are fourteen.

SIDEBOARD.

That's hard, cruel by Jupiter! Aces againſt me every time.

WILLIAM.

Four aces are fourteen: fifteen. (Plays)

SIDEBOARD.

There's your equality.

WILLIAM.

Very well: I turned out my point. Sixteen, (Plays) ſeventeen. (Plays.)

Enter MUSLIN.

MUSLIN.

There's a couple of you, indeed! You are ſo fond of the vices of your betters, that you are ſcarce out of your beds, but you muſt imitate them and their profligate ways. Set you up forſooth!

WILLIAM.

Prithee, be quiet, woman, do. Eighteen. (Plays)

MUSLIN.

Upon my word!—With your uſual eaſe Mr. Coxcomb.

WILLIAM.

Manners, Mrs. Muſlin: you ſee Mr. Sideboard here; he is juſt come on a meſſage from Sir Baſhfull Conſtant.

Conſtant. Have ſome reſpect for a ſtranger. Nineteen, clubs.——(Plays.)

MUSLIN.

It would become Mr. Sideboard to go back with his anſwer, and it would become you to ſend my Lady word——

WILLIAM.

Command your tongue, Mrs. Muſlin: you'll put me out. What ſhall I play?—He will go back with his anſwer in good time. Let his maſter wait till it ſuits our conveniency. Nineteen, clubs: where ſhall I go now?

MUSLIN.

Have done with your folly, Mr. Impertinent. My Lady deſires to know——

WILLIAM.

I tell you, woman, my maſter and I deſire to have nothing to do with you and your Lady. Twenty, diamonds. (Plays.)

MUSLIN.

But I tell you, Mr. Brazen, that my Lady deſires to know at what hour your maſter came home laſt night, and how he does this morning?

WILLIAM.

Ridiculous! Don't diſturb us with that nonſenſe now: you ſee I am not at leiſure. I and my maſter are reſolved to be teazed no more by you; and ſo Mrs. Go-between, you may return as you came,

What the devil ſhall I play? We will have nothing to do with you, I tell you.

MUSLIN.

You'll have nothing to do with us! But you ſhall have to do with us, or I'll know the reaſon why. (She ſnatches the cards from him, and throws them about.)

WILLIAM.

Death and fury! this meddling woman has deſtroyed my whole game. A man might as well be married, as be treated in this faſhion.

SIDEBOARD.

I ſhall ſcore you for this, Mr. William: I was ſure of the cards, and that would have made me up.

WILLIAM.

No you'll ſcore nothing for this. You win too much of me. I am a very pretty annuity to you.

SIDEBOARD.

Annuity ſay you? I loſe a fortune to you in the courſe of the year. How could you, Mrs. Muſlin, behave in this ſort to perſons of our dignity?

MUSLIN.

Decamp with your dignity; take your anſwer to your maſter; turn upon your rogues heel, and rid the houſe.

SIDEBOARD.

I ſhan't diſpute with you. I hate wrangling: I leave that to lawyers and married people; they have nothing elſe to do. Mr. William, I ſhall let Sir Baſhfull Baſhfull know that Mr. Lovemore will be at home for him. When you come to our houſe, I'll give you your revenge. We can have a ſnug party there, and I promiſe you a glaſs of choice Champaigne: it happens to be a good batch; Sir Baſhfull gets none of it: I keep it for my own friends. Au revoir.

[Exit.

WILLIAM. (to MUSLIN.)

You ſee what miſchief you have made.

MUSLIN.

Truce with your foolery, and now, Sir, be ſo obliging as to ſend my Lady an anſwer to her queſtions? How and when your rakehelly maſter came home laſt night?

WILLIAM.

I'll tell you one thing, Mrs. Muſlin; you and my maſter will be the death of me at laſt. In the name of charity, what do you both take me for? Whatever appearances may be, I am but of mortal mould; nothing ſupernatural about me.

MUSLIN.

Upon my word, Mr. Powder-Puff!

WILLIAM.

I have not, indeed; and fleſh and blood, let me tell you, can't hold it always at this rate. I can't be for ever a ſlave to Mr. Lovemore's eternal frolicks, and to your ſecond hand airs.

MUSLIN.

Second-hand airs!

WIL-

WILLIAM.

Yes, ſecond-hand airs! you take them at your ladies toilets with their caſt gowns, and ſo you deſcend to us with them.—And then on the other hand, there's my maſter!—Becauſe he chuſes to live upon the principal of his health, and ſo run out his whole ſtock as faſt as he can, he muſt have my company with him in his devil's dance to the other world! Never at home till three, four, five, ſix in the morning.

MUSLIN.

Ay, a vile ungrateful man! always ranging abroad, and no regard for a wife that doats upon him. And your love for me is all of a piece. I have no patience with you both; a couple of falſe, perfidious, abandoned profligates!

WILLIAM.

Hey! where is your tongue running? My maſter, as the world goes, is a good ſort of a civil kind of a huſband; and I, heaven help me! a poor ſimpleton of a conſtant, amorous puppy, who bear with all the whims of my little tyrant here. Come and kiſs me, you jade, come and kiſs me.

MUSLIN.

Paws off Cæſar. Don't think to make me your dupe. I know when you go with him to this new lady, this Bath-acquaintance; and I know you are as falſe as my maſter, and give all my dues to your Mrs. Mignionet there.

WILLIAM.

Huſh! not a word of that. I am ruined, preſſed, and and ſent on board a Tender directly, if you blab that I truſted you with that ſecret.——But to charge me with falſehood!—injuſtice and ingratitude.——My maſter, to be ſure, does drink an agreeable diſh of tea with the widow. He has been there every evening this month paſt. How long things are to be in this train, heaven only knows. But he does viſit there, and I attend him. I aſk my maſter, Sir, ſays I, what time will you pleaſe to want me? He fixes the hour, and I ſtrut by Mrs. Mignionet, without ſo much as tipping her a ſingle glance. She ſtands watering at the mouth, and a pretty fellow that, ſays ſhe: Ay, gaze on, ſay I, gaze on: I know what you would be at: You would be glad to have me: But ſour grapes, my dear; and ſo home I come, to cheriſh my own lovely little wanton: you know I do, and after toying with thee, I fly back to my maſter, later indeed than he appoints, but always too ſoon for him. He is loth to part: he lingers and dangles, and I ſtand cooling my heels. Oh! to the devil I pitch ſuch a life.

MUSLIN.

Why don't you ſtrive to reclaim the vile man?

WILLIAM.

Softly; not ſo faſt. I have my talent, to be ſure; yes, I muſt acknowledge ſome talent. But can you ſuppoſe that I have power to turn the drift of his inclinations? Can I give him a new taſte, and lead him as I pleaſe? And to whom? To his wife? Ridiculous! A wife has no attraction now; the ſpring of the paſſions flies back; it won't do.

MUSLIN.

MUSLIN.

Fine talking! and you admire yourſelf for it, don't you? Can you proceed, Sir?

WILLIAM.

I tell you a wife is out of date: the time was, but that's all over; a wife is a drug now; mere tar-water, with every virtue under heaven, but nobody takes it.

MUSLIN.

Have done, or I'll print theſe ten nails upon your rogue's face.

WILLIAM.

Come and kiſs me, I ſay.

MUSLIN.

A fiddleſtick for your kiſſes, while you encourage your maſter to open rebellion againſt the beſt of wives.

WILLIAM.

I tell you it's all her own fault. Why does not ſhe ſtudy to pleaſe him as you do me? Come, and throw you arms about my neck.

MUSLIN.

As I uſed to do, Mr. Impudence?

WILLIAM.

Then I muſt force you to you own good. (kiſſes her) Pregnant with delight! egad, if my maſter was not in the next room——(bell rings.)

Mus-

MUSLIN.

Huſh! my Lady's bell: how long as he been up?

WILLIAM.

He has been up—(kiſſes her) 'Sdeath! you have ſet me all on fire. (kiſſes her.)

MUSLIN.

There, there; have done now; the bell rings again. What muſt I ſay? When did he come home?

WILLIAM.

He came home——(kiſſes her) he came home at five this morning; damned himſelf for a blockhead (kiſſes) Went to bed in a ſurly humour; was tired of himſelf and every body elſe. (bell rings, he kiſſes her.) And he is now in tip-top ſpirits with Sir Brilliant Faſhion in that room yonder.

MUSLIN.

Sir Brilliant Faſhion? I wiſh my Lady would mind what he ſays to her—you great bear! you have given me ſuch a fluſh in my face! (takes a pocket looking glaſs) I look pretty well, I think. There (kiſſes him) have done, and let me begone.

[Exit.

WILLIAM.

There goes high and low life contraſted in one perſon. She has not dived to the bottom of my maſter's ſecrets; that's one good thing. What ſhe knows, ſhe'll blab. We ſhall hear of this widow from Bath; but the plot lies deeper than they are aware of. Enquire they will; and let 'em, ſay I; their anſwer will do 'em no good. "Mr. Lovemore viſit "the widow Bellmour!" We know "no ſuch per-"ſon." That's what they'll get for their pains. Their puzzle will be greater than ever, and they may ſit down to chew the cud of diſappointed malice.—— Huſh! my maſter and Sir Brilliant: I'll take care of a ſingle rogue, and get me out of their way.

of

[Exit.

Enter LOVEMORE and SIR BRILLIANT.

LOVEMORE.

My dear Sir Brilliant, I muſt both pity and laugh at you. Thou art metamorphoſed into the moſt whimſical being!

SIR BRILLIANT.

If your raillery diverts you, go on with it. This is always the caſe: apply for ſober advice, and your friend plays you off with a joke.

LOVEMORE.

Sober advice! very far gone indeed. There is no ſuch thing as talking ſoberly to the tribe of lovers, That eternal abſence of mind that poſſeſſes you all! There is no ſociety with you. I was damnable company myſelf, when I was one of the pining herd; but a doſe of matrimony has cooled me pretty handſomely; and here comes repetatur hauſtus.

Enter MUSLIN.

MUSLIN.

My Lady ſends her compliments, and begs to know how you do this morning.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE. (aſide to SIR BRILLIANT.)

The novelty of the compliment is enlivening—It is the devil to be teazed in this manner.—What did you ſay, child?

MUSLIN.

My Lady hopes you find yourſelf well this morning.

LOVEMORE.

Ay, your Lady:—give her my compliments, and tell her—tell her I hope ſhe is well, and—(yawns.)

MUSLIN.

She begs you won't think of going out without ſeeing her.

LOVEMORE.

To be ſure, ſhe has ſuch variety every time one ſees her—my head aches woefully—tell your lady—I ſhall be glad to ſee her; I'll wait on her---(yawns) tell her what you will.

MUSLIN.

A brute!—I ſhall let my lady know, Sir.

[Exit.

LOVEMORE.

My dear Sir Brilliant, you ſee me an example before your eyes. Put the widow Bellmour out of your head, and let my Lord Etheridge be the victim for you.

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

Poſitively no; my pride is picqued. My Lord Etheridge ſhall find me a more formidable rival than he imagines. By the way, how long has the noble Peer been in England?

LOVEMORE.

His motions are unknown to me.—(aſide) I don't like that queſtion.—His Lordſhip is in France, is not he?

SIR BRILLIANT.

No; he is certainly returned. The match is to be concluded privately.—He viſits her incog.

LOVEMORE. (forcing a laugh.)

Oh! no; that can't be; my Lord Etheridge loves parade. I cannot help laughing. The jealouſy of you lovers is for ever conjuring up phantoms to torment yourſelves. My dear Sir Brilliant, wait for realities; there are enough in life, and you may teach your fancy to be at reſt, and give you no further trouble.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Nay, don't let your fancy run away with you. What I tell you, is the real truth.

LOVEMORE.

Well, if it be true, and if Lord Etheridge is come to England to marry, do you go to France not to marry, and you will have the beſt of the bargain.

Enter

Enter WILLIAM.

WILLIAM.

Sir Baſhfull Conſtant is in his chariot at the upper end of the ſtreet, and if your Honour is at leiſure, he will wait upon you.

LOVEMORE.

Have not I ſent him word I ſhould be at home? Let him come as ſoon as he will. [Exit William] Another inſtance, Sir Brilliant, to deter you from all thoughts of matrimony.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Po! hang him; he his no precedent for me. A younger brother, who lived in middling life, comes to a title and an eſtate on the death of a conſumptive Baronet; marries a woman of quality, and now carries the primitive ideas of his narrow education into high life. Don't you remember when he had chambers in Fig tree court, and uſed to ſaunter and lounge away his time in Temple Coffee houſes? The fellow is as dull as a bill in chancery.

LOVEMORE.

But he is improved ſince that time.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Impoſſible; don't you ſee how he goes on? He knows nothing of the world; if his eyes meet yours, he bluſhes up to his ears, and looks ſuſpicious, as if he imagined you have a deſign upon him.

LOVEMORE.

I can explain that part of his character. He has a mortal averſion to wit and raillery, and dreads nothing ſo much as being laughed at for being particular.

SIR BRILLIANT.

And ſo, fearing to be ridiculous, he becomes ſubſtantially ſo every moment.

LOVEMORE.

Even ſo, and if you look at him, he ſhrinks back from your obſervation, caſting a ſly, ſlow, jealous eye all round him, like Miſs Bumpkin in a country village, aukwardly endeavouring to conceal what the increaſe of her ſhape diſcovers to the whole pariſh.

SIR BRILLIANT.

And then his behaviour to his lady!

LOVEMORE.

Why, as to that point, I don't think he hates her. His fear of ridicule may be at the bottom. He has ſtrange notions about the dignity of a huſband. There is a ſecret, which he would fain tell me, and yet he is ſhy, and he hints, and he heſitates, and then he retreats back into himſelf, and ends juſt where he began. But with all his faults, he has fits of good nature. There;—his chariot's at the door.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Lady Conſtant, you mean, has fits of good nature. Have you made any progreſs there?

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

That's well from you, who are the formidable man in that quarter.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh! no; poſitively, no pretence, no colour for it.

LOVEMORE.

Don't I know that you have made advances?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Advances! I pity my Lady Conſtant, and—

LOVEMORE.

Well, that's generous—huſh! I hear him coming. Sir Brilliant, I admire your amorous charity of all things.

Enter SIR BASHFULL CONSTANT.

SIR BASHFULL.

Mr. Lovemore, I have taken the liberty—but you ſeem to be buſy, and I intrude perhaps.

LOVEMORE.

Oh, by no means: walk in Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

Sir Brilliant, I am glad to ſee you. (Bows awkwardly.)

SIR BRILLIANT.

You do me honour, Sir. I hope you left my Lady well.

SIR BASHFULL.

I can't say, Sir; I am not her physician.

SIR BRILLIANT. (aside)

An absurd brute!—Lovemore, I'll just step and pay a short visit to our friend over the way.

LOVEMORE.

Why in such a hurry?

SIR BRILLANT.

I shall return immediately. I'll be with you before you are dressed. Sir Bashfull, I kiss your hand. [Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

I am glad he is gone. I have something, Mr. Lovemore, that I want to advise with you about.

LOVEMORE.

Have you!

SIR BASHFULL.

I have had another brush with my wife.

LOVEMORE.

I am sory for it, Sir Bashfull.——(aside) I am perfectly glad of it.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Pretty warm the quarrel was. She took it in a high tone. Sir Baſhfull, ſays ſhe, I wonder you will diſgrace yourſelf at this rate. You know my pin money is not ſufficient. The Mercer and every body duning me! I can't go on after this faſhion, ſays ſhe, and then ſomething about her quality.—— You know, Mr. Lovemore, (ſmiling) ſhe is a woman of high quality.

LOVEMORE.

Yes, and a very fine woman.

SIR BASHFULL.

No, no, no; not much of that—and yet—(looks at him and ſmiles) Do you think her a fine woman?

LOVEMORE.

Undoubtedly; where do you ſee any body that outſhines her?

SIR BASHFULL.

Why to be ſure—(ſmiling) one does not often ſee her eclipſed. I think ſhe is what you may call a fine woman. She keeps good company.

LOVEMORE.

The very beſt.

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes, yes; your tiptop, none elſe. And yet to encourage her too far were dangerous. Too complying a huſband makes but a ſorry figure in the eyes of the world.

LOVEMORE.

The world will talk, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

Too faſt, Mr. Lovemore. Their tongues will run on, and one does not like to give them a ſubject. I anſwered her ſtoutly: Madam, ſays I, a fig for your quality: I am maſter in my own houſe, and who do you think—(winks at Lovemore) putting myſelf in a paſſion, you know—Who do you think is to pay for your Cats and your Dogs, and your Monkeys, and your Squirrels, and your gaming debts?

LOVEMORE.

How could you? That was ſharply ſaid,

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes; I gave it her. But for all that I am main good natured at the bottom.

LOVEMORE.

You was not in earneſt then?

SIR BASHFULL.

No, no; that's the point: a man muſt keep up his own dignity. I'll tell you what I did.

LOVEMORE.

Well;—you did what's proper I dare ſay.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

I hope you'll think ſo —Don't laugh at me.—— Come, I will tell you. I went to her Mercer ſlily and paid him the money. (ſmiling)

LOVEMORE.

Did you?

SIR BASHFULL. (Looking alarmed)

Was not it right?

LOVEMORE.

It was elegant.

SIR BASHFULL.

I am glad you approve. I took care to ſave appearances. One would not have the world know it.

LOVEMORE

By no means.

SIR BASHFULL.

It would make them think me too uxorious.

LOVEMORE.

So it would—(aſide) I muſt encourage that notion. While you live, guard againſt being too uxorious. Though our wives deſerve "our fondneſs," the world will laugh at us;—and hark ye, if our wives don't deſerve it, they'll laugh at us the more.

SIR BASHFULL.

I know it. And ſo ſays I, Mr. Luteſtring, there's your money, but tell no body that I paid it ſlily.

LOVEMORE.

Why, that's doing a genteel thing by ſtratagem.—Admirably contrived!

SIR BASHFULL.

I think it was. But I have a deeper ſecret for you.

LOVEMORE.

Have you?

SIR BASHFULL.

I have.—May I truſt you?

LOVEMORE.

Now there you hurt me. I feel that, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

I beg your pardon. I know you are my friend. I have great confidence in you. You muſt know—look ye, Mr. Lovemore——you muſt know——

Enter MUSLIN.

MUSLIN.

My lady deſires to know if you chuſe a diſh of tea this morning.

LOVEMORE.

Po! ridiculous!---tell your miſtreſs --- go about your buſineſs. (Turns her out.)

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

I ſee how it is. He does not care a cherry-ſtone for his wife.

LOVEMORE.

Such impertinence!——Well, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

He does not value her a pinch of ſnuff. (aſide)

LOVEMORE.

Well, I am all attention.

SIR BASHFULL.

It does not ſignify. A fooliſh affair; I won't trouble you.

LOVEMORE.

Nay, that's unkind. It will be no trouble.

SIR BASHFULL.

Well, well, I—I—Do you think Muſlin did not overhear us?

LOVEMORE.

Not a ſyllable. Come, we are ſafe.

SIR BASHFULL.

I don't know but—let me aſk you a queſtion, firſt. ——Have you any regard for your lady?

LOVEMORE.

The higheſt value for her. But then you know appearances——

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Right!—I repoſe it with you.—You muſt know, Mr. Lovemore, as I told you, I am at the bottom very good natured, and though it may be thought ——we are interrupted again.

Enter SIR BRILLIANT.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Lovemore, I have paid my viſit.

LOVEMORE.

Pſhaw!—this is unlucky——You are as good as your word, Sir Brilliant.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Perhaps you have buſineſs?

SIR BASHFULL.

No, no buſineſs—(turns to LOVEMORE.) there's no proceeding now——I was going, Sir Brilliant, Mr. Lovemore, I wiſh you a good day.

LOVEMORE.

Po! prithee, you ſhan't leave me yet.

SIR BASHFULL.

I muſt; I can't ſtay. (aſide to LOVEMORE) Another time. Suppoſe you call at my houſe at one o'clock.

LOVEMORE.

With all my heart.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Do ſo; nobody ſhall interrupt us. Mr. Lovemore, I take my leave. Sir Brilliant, I kiſs your hand. You won't forget, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

Oh! no; depend upon me.

SIR BASHFULL.

A good morning. He is the only friend I have. [Exit.

LOVEMORE.

Ha! ha! you broke in in the moſt critical moment. He was juſt going to be delivered of his ſecret.

SIR BRILLIANT.

I beg your pardon. How could you let me?

LOVEMORE.

Nay, no matter. I ſhall worm it out of him.

Enter MUSLIN.

MUSLIN.

My Lady, Sir, is quite impatient.

LOVEMORE.

Po! for ever teazing! I'll wait upon her preſently. [Exit MUSLIN.

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

I'll ſtep and chat with her while you dreſs. May I take the liberty?

LOVEMORE.

You know you may: no ceremony. How could you aſk me ſuch a queſtion?——Apropos, Sir Brilliant; I want a word with you. Step with me into the ſtudy for a moment.

SIR BRILLIANT.

I attend you.

LOVEMORE.

Poor Sir Baſhfull!——ha! ha!——a ridiculous, unaccountable——What does he mean?

[Exeunt.

Scene another Apartment.

Mrs. LOVEMORE at her Tea-Table.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

This traſh of tea! I don't know why I drink ſo much of it. Heigho!—what keeps Muſlin? Surely never was an unhappy woman treated with ſuch cruel indifference; nay, with ſuch open, ſuch undiſguiſed inſolence of gallantry.

Enter MUSLIN.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Well, Muſlin? have you ſeen his Prime Miniſter?

MUS-

MUSLIN.

Yes, Ma'am, I have ſeen Mr. William. He ſays his maſter is going out, according to the old trade, and he does not expect to ſee him again till to-morrow morning. Mr. Lovemore is now in the ſtudy. Sir Brilliant Faſhion is with him: I heard them, as I paſſed by the door, laughing as loud as two actors in a comedy.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

About ſome precious miſchief, I'll be ſworn, and all at my coſt. Heigho!

MUSLIN.

Dear Ma'am, why chagrine yourſelf about a vile man, that is not worth——no, as I hope for mercy, not worth a ſingle ſigh?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

What can I do, Muſlin?

MUSLIN.

Do, Ma'am——If I was as you, I'd do for him. If I could not cure my grief, I'd find ſome comfort, that's what I would.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Comfort? Alas; there is none for me.

MUSLIN.

And whoſe fault then?—Would any body but you——it provokes me to think of it——Would any but you,——young, handſome, with wit, graces, talents, would any body, with ſo many accompliſhments,

ments, ſit at home here, as melancholy as a poor ſervant out of place?——And all for what? For a huſband? And ſuch a huſband! What do you think the world will ſay of you, Ma'am?

Mrs. Lovemore.

I care not what they ſay. I am tired of the world, and the world may be tired of me, if it will. My troubles are to myſelf only, and I muſt endeavour to bear them. Who knows what patience may do? If Mr. Lovemore has any feeling left, my conduct and his own heart may one day incline him to do me juſtice.

Muslin.

But, dear Ma'am, that's waiting for dead men's ſhoes. Incline him to do you juſtice!—What ſignifies expecting and expecting? Give me a bird in the hand. If all the women in London, who happen to be in your caſe, were to ſit down, and die of the ſpleen, what would become of the public places? They might turn Vauxhall to a hop-garden; make a brewhouſe of Ranelagh, and let both the Playhouſes to a methodiſt-preacher. We ſhould not have the racketting we have now. John, let the horſes be put to—John, go to my Lady Trump-abouts, and invite her to a ſmall party of twenty or thirty card tables.——John, run to my Lady Catgut, and let her know I'll wait upon her Ladyſhip to the Opera---John, run as faſt as ever you can, with my compliments to Mr. Varney, and tell him it will be the death of me, if I have not a box for the new play.---Lord bleſs you, Ma'am, they rantipole it about this town, with as unconcerned looks, and as florid outſides, as if they were treated at home like ſo many goddeſſes; though every body knows poſſeſſion has unungoddeſſed them all long ago, and their huſbands care no more for them, no, by Jingo, no more than they do for their huſbands.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

At what a rate you run on?

MUSLIN.

It is enough to make a body run on. If every body thought like you, Ma'am——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

If every body loved like me!

MUSLIN.

A braſs thimble for love, if it is not returned by love. What the deuce is here to do? Love for love is ſomething: but to love alone, where's the good of that? Shall I go and fix my heart upon a man, who ſhall deſpiſe me for that very reaſon? And, ay, ſays he, "Poor fool! I ſee ſhe adores me. The woman's "well enough, only ſhe has one inconvenient cir-"cumſtance about her; I am married to her, and "marriage is the devil."

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Will you have done?

MUSLIN.

I have not half done, Ma'am. And when the vile man goes a rogueing, he ſmiles impudently in your face, "and I am going to the chocolate houſe, my "dear; amuſe yourſelf in the mean time, my love." Fy upon 'em; I know 'em all. Give me a huſband that that will enlarge the circle of my innocent pleaſures; but a huſband now a days, is no ſuch a thing. A huſband now is nothing but a ſcare-crow, to ſhew you the fruit, but touch it if you dare. The devil's in 'em, the Lord forgive me for ſwearing. A huſband is a mere bugbear, a ſnap-dragon, a monſter; that is to ſay, if one makes him ſo, then he is a monſter indeed; and if one does not make him ſo, then he behaves like a monſter; and of the two evils, by my troth——But here, Ma'am, here comes one who can tell you all about it. Here comes Sir Brilliant: aſk his advice, Ma'am.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

His advice?——Aſk advice of the man, who has eſtranged Mr. Lovemore's affections from me?

MUSLIN.

Well I proteſt and vow, I think Sir Brilliant a very pretty gentleman. He is the very pink of the faſhion. He dreſſes faſhionably, lives faſhionably, wins your money faſhionably, loſes his own faſhionably, and does every thing faſhionably; and then he looks ſo lively, and ſo much to ſay, and ſo never at a loſs!——but here he comes.

Enter SIR BRILLIANT.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Mrs. Lovemore, my dear Ma'am, always in a vis-a-vis party with your ſuivante?——Afford me your pardon, if I ſay this does a little wear the appearance of being out of humour with the world.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Far from it, Sir Brilliant. We were engaged in your panegyrick.

SIR BRILLIANT.

My panegyrick? Then am I come moſt apropos to give the portrait a few finiſhing touches. Mr. Lovemore, as ſoon as he is dreſſed, will wait upon you: in the mean time, I can help you to ſome anecdotes, which will enable you to colour your canvaſs a little higher.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Among thoſe anecdotes, I hope you will not omit the bright exploit of ſeducing Mr. Lovemore from all domeſtic happineſs.

(ſhe make a ſign to MUSLIN to go)

SIR BRILLIANT.

I, Madam?—Let me periſh if ever——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Oh! Sir, I can make my obſervations.

SIR BRILLIANT.

May fortune eternally forſake me, and beauty frown on me, if I am conſcious of any plot upon earth.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Don't aſſert too ſtrongly, Sir Brilliant.

SIR BRILLIANT.

May I never throw a winning caſt—

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

It is in vain to deny it, Sir.

SIR BRILLIANT.

May I loſe the next ſweepſtakes, if I have ever, in thought, word or deed, been acceſſary to his infidelity. I alienate the affections of Mr. Lovemore! Conſider, Madam, how would this tell in Weſtminſter Hall? Sir Brilliant Faſhion, what ſay you, guilty of this indictment or not guilty? Not guilty, poſs. Thus iſſue is joined. You enter the court: but, my dear Madam, veil thoſe graces that adorn your perſon: abate the fire of thoſe charms: ſo much beauty will corrupt the judges: give me a fair trial.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And thus you think to laugh it away.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Nay, hear me out. You appear in court: you charge the whole upon me, without a ſyllable as to the how, when, and where? No proof poſitive; the proſecution ends, and I begin my defence.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And by playing theſe falſe colours you think I am to be amuſed?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Nay, Mrs. Lovemore, I am now upon my defence. Only hear.—You will pleaſe to conſider, Gentlemen of the Jury, that Mr. Lovemore is not a minor, nor I his guardian. He loves gaiety, pleaſure, and enjoyment:

joyment: is it my fault? He is poſſeſſed of talents and a taſte for pleaſure, which he knows how to gratify: can I reſtrain him? He knows the world, makes the moſt of life, and plucks the fruit that grows around him: am I to blame? This is the whole affair.—How ſay you, Gentlemen of the Jury? —Not Guilty. There, you ſee how it is. I have cleared myſelf.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Briſk, lively, and like yourſelf, Sir Brilliant! But if you can imagine this bantering way—

SIR BRILLIANT.

Acquitted by my country, Ma'am; fairly acquitted.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

After the very edifying counſel which you give to Mr. Lovemore, this looſe ſtrain is not in the leaſt ſurprizing. And, Sir, your late project—

SIR BRILLIANT.

My late project!

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Your late project, Sir. Not content with leading Mr. Lovemore into a thouſand ſcenes of diſſipation, you have introduced him lately to your miſtreſs Bellmour. You underſtand me, Sir.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Ma'am, he does not ſo much as know the Widow Bellmour.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Nay, Sir Brilliant, have a care: juſtify it if you can, or give it a turn of wit. There is no occaſion to hazard yourſelf too far.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Falſehood I diſdain, Madam, and I, Sir Brilliant Faſhion, declare that Mr. Lovemore is not acquainted with the Widow Bellmour. And if he was, what then? Do you know the lady?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I know her, Sir? A perſon of that character?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh!——I ſee you don't know her: but I will let you into her whole hiſtory.——Pray be ſeated——you ſhall know her whole hiſtory, and then judge for yourſelf. The Widow Bellmour, Madam——

LOVEMORE. (within)

William, are the horſes put to?

SIR BRILLIANT.

We are interrupted.

Enter LOVEMORE.

LOVEMORE.

Very well: let the carriage be brought round directly.——How do you do, my dear?—Sir Brilliant I beg your pardon.—My Love, you don't anſwer ſwer me: how do you do this morning? (with an air of cold civility)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

A little indiſpoſed in mind: but indiſpoſition of the mind is of no conſequence: nobody pities it.

LOVEMORE.

I beg your pardon, Mrs. Lovemore. Indiſpoſition of the mind—Sir Brilliant, that's a mighty pretty ring on your finger.

SIR BRILLIANT.

A bauble: will you look at it? (gives the ring)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Though I have but few obligations to Sir Brilliant, I ſuppoſe I am to aſcribe to him the favour of this viſit, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

(looking at the ring, and laughing)

Now there you wrong me.—Your enquiries about my health have been very obliging this morning, and I came to return the compliment before I go out.—It is ſet very neatly. (gives back the ring)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Are you going out, Sir?

LOVEMORE.

A matter of buſineſs——How I do hate buſineſs! —But buſineſs (examining his ruffles)—buſineſs muſt be done.—Pray is there any news?---Any news, my dear?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

It would be news to me, Sir, if you would be kind enough to let me know whether I may expect the favour of your company at dinner to-day.

LOVEMORE.

It would be impertinent in me to anſwer ſuch a queſtion, for I can give no direct anſwer to it.---I am the ſlave of events; juſt as things happen; perhaps I may; perhaps not. But don't let me be of any inconvenience to you. Is it material where a body eats?---Have you heard what happened to me?

(aſide to SIR BRILLIANT.)

SIR BRILLIANT.

When and where?

LOVEMORE.

A word in your ear---with your permiſſion, Ma'am?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

That cold, contemptuous civility, Mr. Lovemore---

LOVEMORE.

Po! prithee now, how can you?---that is very peeviſh, and very illnatured.—(turning to SIR BRILLIANT) I loſt very thing I played for after you went. The foreigner and he underſtand one another.---I beg your pardon, Mrs. Lovemore; it was only about an affair at the Opera.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

The Opera or any thing is more agreeable than my company.

LOVEMORE.

Now there again you wrong me. (to SIR BRILLIANT) We dine at the St. Alban's.—How can you Mrs. Lovemore? I make it a point not to incommode you. You poſſibly may have ſome private party; and it would be unpolite in me to obſtruct your ſchemes of pleaſure. Would not it, Sir Brilliant?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh!—Gothick to the laſt degree!

LOVEMORE.

Very true; vulgar and mechanick! (both ſtand laughing.)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Go on; make ſport for yourſelves, gentlemen.

LOVEMORE.

Ho! ho! ho! I am ſore with laughing.—If you, Madam, have arranged an agreeable party, for me to be preſent, it would look as if we lived together like Sir Baſhfull Conſtant and his Lady, who are always, like two Game-cocks, ready armed to goad and ſpur one another. Hey! Sir Brilliant?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh! the very thing: or like Sir Theodore Traffic at Tunbridge taking his wife under the arm in the public rooms, and "come along home, I tell you."

LOVEMORE.

Exactly ſo. (Both continue laughing.) Odds my life! I ſhall be beyond my time (looks at his watch) any commands into the city, my dear?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Commands!—no, Sir, I have no commands.

LOVEMORE.

I have an appointment at my banker's. Sir Brilliant, you know old Diſcount?

SIR BRILLIANT.

He that was in Parliament, and had the large contract?

LOVEMORE.

The ſame: ENTIRE BUTT, I think, was the name of his Borough. Can I ſet you down?

SIR BRILLIANT.

No my carriage waits. I ſhall rattle half the town over preſently.

LOVEMORE.

As you will. Sir Brilliant will entertain you, Ma'am. Au revoir, my love.—Sir Brilliant, yours.—Who waits there?

[Exit ſinging.

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

Bon voyage.—You ſee, Madam, that I don't deprive you of his company.

MRS. LOVEMORE.

Your influence is now unneceſſary. It is grown habitual to him; he will drive to your Mrs. Bellmour, I ſuppoſe.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Apropos; that brings us back to the little hiſtory I was going to give you of that Lady. What is your charge againſt her? That ſhe is amiable? Granted. Young, gay, rich, handſome, with enchanting talents, it is no wonder all the pretty fellows are on their knees to her. Her manner ſo entertaining! that quickneſs of tranſition from one thing to another! that round of variety! and every new attitude does ſo become her; and ſhe has ſuch a feeling heart, and with an air of giddineſs ſo nice a conduct!

MRS. LOVEMORE.

Mighty well, Sir; ſhe is a very veſtal. Finiſh your portrait. A veſtal from your ſchool of painting muſt be a curioſity.—But how comes it, Sir, if ſhe is this wonder, that your honourable propoſals are at an end there?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Compulſion, Ma'am: it is not voluntary. My Lord Etheridge is the happy man. I thought he was out of the kingdom; but his lordſhip is with her her ev'ry evening. I can ſcarce gain admittance; and ſo all that remains for me, is to do juſtice to the lady, and conſole myſelf in the beſt way I can for the inſufficiency of my pretenſions.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And am I to believe all this?

SIR BRILLIANT.

May the firſt woman I pay my addreſſes to, ſtrike me to the centre with a ſupercilious eyebrow, if every ſyllable is not minutely true.—So that you ſee, I am not the cauſe of your inquietude.—There is not in the world a perſon, who more earneſtly aſpires to prove the tender eſteem he bears you.—I have long panted for an opportunity ---by all that's ſoft ſhe liſtens to me (aſide)---I have long panted, Ma'am, for a tender moment like this---

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

(looking gravely at him)

Sir!

SIR BRILLIANT.

I have panted with all the ardour, which charms like your's muſt kindle in every heart—

Mrs. LOVEMORE. (walks away)

This liberty, Sir—

SIR BRILLIANT.

Conſider, Madam: we have both cauſe of diſcontent; both diſappointed; both croſſed in love; and and the leaſt we can do is both to join, and ſweeten each other's cares.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And your friend, Sir, who has juſt left you—

SIR BRILLIANT.

He, Madam, for a long time—I have ſeen it, with vexation ſeen it,—yes, he has long been falſe to honour, love, and you.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Sir Brilliant, I have done. You take my wrongs too much to heart, Sir—(rings a bell)

SIR BRILLIANT.

" Thoſe eyes that tell us what the ſun is made of;
" Thoſe hills of driven ſnow!"---

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Will nobody anſwer there?

Enter MUSLIN.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Madam, I deſiſt: when you are in better humour, recollect what I have ſaid. Your adorer takes his leave. Sir Brilliant, mind your hits, and her ſtrait-laced virtue will ſurrender at laſt. Madam--- [Bows reſpectfully; Exit.

MUSLIN.

As I live and breathe, Ma'am, if I was as you, I would not fluſter myſelf about it.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

About what?

MUSLIN.

What ſignifies mincing the matter? I heard it all.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You did? did you? (looks angrily)

MUSLIN.

Ma'am!

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Impertinence! (walks about) Oh! Mr. Lovemore!---To make his character public, and render him the topick of every tea-table throughout this town: I muſt avoid that.

MUSLIN.

What the deuce is here to do?---An unmannerly thing, for to go for to huff me in this manner! (aſide)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

That would only widen the breach, and inſtead of neglect, might call forth reſentment, and ſettle at laſt into a fixed averſion: lawyers, parting, and ſeparate maintenance!---What muſt be done?

MUSLIN.

What is ſhe thinking of now?---A ſulky thing, not not to be more familiar with ſuch a friend as I am. ---Did you ſpeak to me, Ma'am?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

It may ſucceed: ſuppoſe I try it---Muſlin.

MUSLIN.

Ma'am. (running to her)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You heard Sir Brilliant ſay that Mr. Lovemore is not acquainted with the Widow?

MUSLIN.

Lard, Ma'am, he is as full of tricks as a French milliner. I know he does viſit there: I know it from William. I'll be hanged in my own garters, if he does not.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I know not what to do. Let my chair be got ready.

MUSLIN.

Your chair, Ma'am!---Are you going out?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Let me hear no more queſtions: do as I order you. [Exit.

MUSLIN.

Which way is the wind now? No matter; ſhe does not know what ſhe'd be at. If ſhe would but take my advice,--go abroad, viſit every where, ſee the the world, throw open her doors, give balls, aſſemblies, concerts; ſing, dance, dreſs, ſpend all her money, run in debt, ruin her huſband; there would be ſome ſenſe in that: the man would ſtay at home then to quarrel with her. She would have enough of his company. But no; mope, mope for ever; heigho! teaze, teaze; Muſlin, ſtep to William; where's his maſter? When did he come home? How long has he been up? A fine life truly!---I love to be in the faſhion, for my part. Bleſs me, I had like to have forgot. Mrs. Marmalet comes to my rout to night. She might as well ſtay away: ſhe is nothing but meer lumber. The formal thing won't play higher than ſhilling whiſt. How the devil does ſhe think I can make a ſhilling party for her? There is no ſuch a thing now a days: no body plays ſhilling whiſt now, unleſs I was to invite the trades-people: but I ſhan't let myſelf down for Madam Marmalet, that I promiſe her.

End of the FIRST ACT.

ACT

ACT the SECOND.

Scene an Apartment at SIR BASHFULL CONSTANT'S.

Enter SIR BASHFULL.

SIR BASHFULL.

DID not I hear a rap at the door? Yes, yes, I did; I am right. The carriage is juſt now driving away. Who anſwers there? Sideboard; ſtep hither, Sideboard. I muſt know who it is: my wife keeps the beſt company in England. Hold, I muſt be wary. Servants love to pry into their maſters ſecrets.

Enter SIDEBOARD.

SIR BASHFULL.

Whoſe carriage was that at the door?

SIDEBOARD.

The Dutcheſs of Hurricane, your honour.

SIR BASHFULL.

The Dutcheſs of Hurricane? (Walks aſide and ſmiles) A woman of great rank!—what did ſhe want?

SIDEBOARD.

She has left this card for my Lady.

SIR BRILLIANT.

A card? Let me ſee it. (Reads.) The Dutcheſs of of Hurricane preſents compliments to Lady Conſtant. She has left the hounds and the foxes, and the brutes, that gallop after them, to their own dear ſociety for the reſt of the winter, Her Grace keeps Wedneſdays at Hurricane-Houſe for the reſt of the winter.---Make me thankful, here's a card from a Dutcheſs !---what have you there?

SIDEBOARD.

A parcel of cards, that have been left here this morning.

SIR BASHFULL.

All theſe in one morning? (looks at them) Why I may as well keep an Inn; may as well keep the Coach and Horſes in Piccadilly. (reads faſt) Lady Riot---Mrs. Allnight---The Dutcheſs of Carmine---look ye there, another Dutcheſs! Lady Baſſet---Lord Pleuriſie---the Counteſs of Ratifie---Sir Richard Lungs---Lord Laudanum---Sir Charles Valerian---Lady Hectick---Lady Mary Gabble---I can't bear all this, Sideboard---(aſide and ſmiling) I cant bear the pleaſure of it: all people of tip-top condition to viſit my wife!

Enter FURNISH.

SIR BASHFULL.

What's the matter, Furniſh?

FURNISH.

The mattter, Sir?---Nothing's the matter.

SIR BASHFULL.

What are you about? Where are you going? What have you to do now?

FUR-

FURNISH.

Only to tell the chairmen they muſt take Black George with his flambeau with them this evening, and carry the chair to pay viſits for my lady.

SIR BASHFULL.

An empty chair to pay viſits!—what polite ways people of faſhion have got of being intimate with each other!—(aſide) abſurd as it is, I am glad to ſee my wife keep pace with the beſt of them. I laugh at it, and yet I like it.—Wounds! I ſhall be found out by my ſervants.—I tell you, Sideboard, and you Mrs. Buſy Body, that your Miſtreſs leads a life of noiſe and hurry, and cards and dice, and vanity, and nonſenſe, and I am reſolved to bear it no longer.---Don't I hear her coming?

FURNISH.

My lady is coming, Sir.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide and ſmiling)

She looks charmingly.---Now I'll tell her roundly a piece of my mind. You ſhall ſee who commands in this houſe.

Enter LADY CONSTANT.

SIR BASHFULL. (ſteals a look)

I could almoſt give up the point when I look at her.—So, madam, I have had my houſe full of duns again to day.

LADY CONSTANT.

Obliging creatures, to call ſo often. What did they want?

SIR BASHFULL.

Want!—what ſhould they want but money?

LADY CONSTANT.

And you paid them, I ſuppoſe.

SIR BASHFULL.

You ſuppoſe!—'ſdeath, madam, what do you take me for?

LADY CONSTANT.

I took you for a huſband: my brother preſcribed you. But his preſcription has done me no good.

SIR BASHFULL.

Nor me either: I have had a bitter pill of it.

LADY CONSTANT.

But the pill was gilded for you. My fortune, I take it, has paid off the old family mortage on your eſtate.

SIR BASHFULL.

And at the rate you go on, a new mortage will ſwallow up my eſtate.---I ſee you are an ungratefull woman.

LADY CONSTANT.

That is, as you keep the account.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

And my accounts will ſhew it. Day after day nothing but extravagance to gratify your vanity. Did not I go into parliament to pleaſe you? Did not I go down to the Borough of Smoke-and-Sot, and get drunk there for a whole month together? Did not I get mobbed at the George and Vulture? And pelted and horſewhipped the day before the election? And was not I obliged to ſteal out of the town in a rabbit-cart? And all this to be ſomebody as you call it? Did not I ſtand up in the houſe to make a ſpeech to ſhew what an Orator you had married? And did not I expoſe myſelf? Did I know whether I ſtood upon my head or my heels for half an hour together? And did not a great man from the Treaſury-bench tell me never to ſpeak again?

LADY CONSTANT.

And why not take his advice?

SIR BASHFULL.

What in the name of common ſenſe had to I do in Parliament? My country! what's my country to me? The debts of the nation, and your gaming debts are nothing to me. I muſt help to pay both, muſt I? I can vote againſt taxes, and I can advertize in the Gazette to ſecure me from your extravagance. I have not lived in the Temple for nothing.

FURNISH.

He ſlept there, and calls it ſtudying the law.

SIR BASHFULL.

Hold you your tongue, Mrs. Pert: leave the room. Go both about your buſineſs.

[Exeunt FURNISH and SIDEBOARD.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

I have kept it up before my ſervants. (Looks at Lady Conſtant) She is a fine woman after all.

LADY CONSTANT.

Is there never to be an end of this uſage, Sir? Am I to be for ever made unhappy by your humours.

SIR BASHFULL.

Humours! good ſenſe and ſound judgement, in in the fine lady's dictionary, are to be called humours?

LADY CONSTANT.

And your humours are now grown inſupportable.

SIR BASHFULL.

Your profuſion is inſupportable. At the rate you go on, how am I to find money for my next election? ---If you would but talk this matter over cooly--- She talks like an angel, and I wiſh I could ſay (aſide) the ſame of myſelf.---What will the world think?--- Only command your temper---what will they think, if I am ſeen to encourage your way of life?

LADY CONSTANT.

Amuſe yourſelf that way, Sir.---Avoid one error, and run into the oppoſite extreme.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

There; a tranſlation from Horace—Dum vitant ſtulti vitia—She is a notable woman.

LADY CONSTANT.

Let me tell you, there is not in life a more ridiculous ſight than the perſon, who guards, with imaginary wiſdom, againſt one gyant-vice, and leaves himſelf open to a million of abſurdities.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

I am nothing to her in an argument—ſhe has a tongue that can reaſon me out of my ſenſes.—I could almoſt find it in my heart to tell her the whole truth.—You know, my Lady Conſtant, that when you want any thing in reaſon—

LADY CONSTANT.

Is it unreaſonable to live with decency? Is it unreaſonable to keep the company my rank and education have entitled me to? Is it unreaſonable to conform to the modes of life, when your fortune can ſo well afford it?

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

She is a very reaſonable woman, and I wiſh I had but half her ſenſe.—You know I am good natured in the main, and if a ſum of money within a moderate compaſs—If a brace of hundreds—(aſide) why ſhould not I make it three?—I know that you have contracted habits of life, and (in a ſoftened tone) habit, I know is not eaſily conquered: and if three (ſmiling) hundred pounds will prevent diſputes, why why (ſmiling) as to the matter of three hundred pounds——

Enter FURNISH, with a band box.

FURNISH.

Your Ladyſhip's things from the milliner's.

SIR BASHFULL.

Death and fury! this woman has overheard me: Three hundred pounds, madam! (in a violent paſſion) let me tell you that three hundred pounds ---what right have you to ſhovel away three hundred pounds?

LADY CONSTANT.

Why does the man fly out into ſuch a paſſion?

SIR BASHFULL.

I will allow no ſuch doings in my houſe. Don't I often come when my hall is beſieged with a parcel of powder-monkey ſervants? And did not I the other day, before I could get into my own doors, entangle myſelf among the chairmen's poles, and was not I confined there, like a man in the ſtocks?

LADY CONSTANT.

Why would you be ſo aukward?

SIR BASHFULL.

An eternal ſcene of routs and drums. Have not I ſeen you put the fee ſimple of a ſcore of my beſt acres upon a ſingle card? And have not I muttered to myſelf, if that woman was as much in love with me me as ſhe is with PAM, what an excellent wife ſhe would make?

LADY CONSTANT.

PAM is very obliging: why wont you ſtrive to be as agreeable?

SIR BASHFULL.

'Sdeath, Madam, you are ſo fond of play that I ſhould not wonder to ſee my next child marked on the forehead with a pair royal of aces.

FURNISH.

I am ſure you deſerve to be marked on the forehead with a pair of——

SIR BASHFULL.

Malapert huſſey! do you meddle? Begone this moment.

[Exit FURNISH.

LADY CONSTANT.

Fy upon it, Sir Baſhfull! I am tired of bluſhing for you.

SIR BASHFULL.

I am afraid I have gone too far: ſhe is aſhamed of me. (aſide)

LADY CONSTANT.

You agreed to a ſeperation the other day, and there remains nothing but to execute articles, and make an end of all this diſquiet.

SIR BASHFULL.

A ſeperate maintenance will go but a little way to anſwer the bawling of Milliners, Mercers, Jewellers, and gaming debts.

LADY CONSTANT.

It will purchaſe content, and nothing can obtain that under your roof.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

I have ſhot my bolt too far---I fancy, my Lady Conſtant, that you don't know me. We might explain matters, and---'ſdeath! (aſide) I am going to blab---I ſay, madam, if you underſtood me rightly---as to the authority of a huſband, I might perhaps be brought to give it up, in part at leaſt; and if no body was the wiſer, I might connive---Po! confuſion! interrupted again by that——

Enter FURNISH.

FURNISH.

A ſervant from Mrs. Lovemore, Madam, to know---

SIR BASHFULL.

The authority of a huſband I never will give up---

LADY CONSTANT.

A ſtorm, a whirlwind is fitter to converſe with.

SIR BASHFULL.

will ſtorm like a whirlwind in my own houſe. I have have done, Madam; you are an ungovernable woman---(aſide and ſmiling) ſhe is a charming woman, and if nobody ſaw it, I would let her govern me with all my heart.

[Exit.

LADY CONSTANT.

Did any body ever ſee ſuch behaviour?

FURNISH.

Never, and how your ladyſhip bears it, I can't tell.

LADY CONSTANT.

That it ſhould be my fate to be married to ſuch a quickſand! What does Mrs. Lovemore ſay?

FURNISH.

If your ladyſhip will be at home, ſhe intends to do herſelf the pleaſure of waiting upon you, Madam.

LADY CONSTANT.

Very well; I ſhall be at home. Upon recollection, I want to ſee her. Let the ſervant wait: I'll write an anſwer. [Exit.

Scene another Apartment.

Enter SIR BASHFULL and LOVEMORE.

SIR BASHFULL.

Walk in, Mr. Lovemore, walk in. I am heartily glad to ſee you. This is kind.

LOVEMORE.

I am ready, you ſee, to attend the call of friendſhip.

SIR BASHFULL.

Mr. Lovemore, you are a friend indeed.

LOVEMORE.

You do me honour, Sir Baſhfull. And your lady, how does ſhe do?

SIR BASHFULL.

Perfectly well: In great ſpirits. (ſmiling at Lovemore) I never ſaw her look better: but we have had t'other ſkirmiſh ſince I ſaw you.

LOVEMORE.

Another!

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay, another; and I did not bate her an ace. She is a rare one to argue. She is fit to diſcuſs a point with any man.—No body like her. Wit at will; I thought I managed the diſpute, and that I ſhould ſoon have had her at a what you call a non-plus. But no, no; no ſuch thing. She can give you a ſharp turn in a moment.

LOVEMORE.

Ay!

SIR BASHFULL.

Give her her due, I am nothing to her. I thought I had

I had her faſt, but ſhe went round me, quick as lightening; and would you believe it? (looks highly pleaſed) She did not leave me a word to ſay.

LOVEMORE.

Well! that was hard upon you.

SIR BASHFULL.

No, not hard at all. Thoſe little victories I don't mind. You know I told you I have ſomething for your private ear. Have you obſerved nothing odd and ſingular in me?

LOVEMORE.

Not in the leaſt. In the whole circle of my acquaintance I know no body ſo little tinged with oddity.

SIR BASHFULL.

What, have you ſeen nothing? (laughs) Have you remarked nothing particular in regard to my wife?

LOVEMORE.

Why, you don't live happy with her: but that is not a ſingular caſe.

SIR BASHFULL.

But I tell you—this muſt be in confidence—I am at the bottom a very odd fellow.

LOVEMORE.

You do yourſelf injuſtice, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

No, not in the leaſt. It is too true—I am in the main main a very odd fellow; I am indeed; as odd a fiſh as lives; and you muſt have ſeen it before now.

LOVEMORE.

I ſee it?—I am not apt to ſpy defects in my friends. What can this be? You are not jealous, I hope.

SIR BASHFULL.

You have not hit the right nail on the head. No, not jealous. Do her juſtice, I am ſafe as to that point. My lady has high notions of honour. No, it is not that.

LOVEMORE.

Not a ray of light to guide me: explain, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL. (ſmiling at him)

You could never have imagined it. But firſt let me ſhut this door.

LOVEMORE.

What whim has got poſſeſſion of him now?

SIR BASHFULL.

Mr. Lovemore, I have great dependance upon you. I am going to make a diſcovery---I bluſh at the very thought of it (Turns away).

LOVEMORE.

Be a man, Sir Baſhfull; out with it at once; let me adviſe you.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

The very thing I want. The affair is—but then if he ſhould betray me!—Mr. Lovemore, I doubt you, and yet eſteem you. Some men there are, who, when a confidence is repoſed in them, take occaſion from thence to hold a hank over their friend, and tyrannize him all the reſt of his days.

LOVEMORE.

O fy! this is ungenerous. True friendſhip is of another quality: It feels from ſympathy; honour is the active principle; and the ſtricteſt ſecrecy is an inviolable rule.

SIR BASHFULL.

Mr. Lovemore, I have no further doubt—ſtay; did not you hear a noiſe?—Don't I ſee a ſhadow moving under the bottom of that door? (goes to the door)

LOVEMORE.

What has got into his head?

SIR BASHFULL (Looking out.)

Servants have a way of liſtening.

LOVEMORE.

Rank jealouſy! he has it through the very brain!

SIR BASHFULL.

No, no; all's ſafe. Mr. Lovemore, I will make you the depoſitary,—the faithful depoſitary of a ſecret: let it paſs from the bottom of my heart to the inmoſt receſs of yours: there let it reſt concealed from every every prying eye.—My inclination—There;—I ſee a laugh already forming in every feature of your face.

LOVEMORE.

Then my face is no true index of the mind. Were you to know the agitations in which you keep me by this ſuſpenſe—

SIR BASHFULL.

I believe it. To make an end at once, my inclinations are totally changed—no; not changed; but they are not what they ſeemed to be. Love is the paſſion that poſſeſſes me.—I am in love, and—(turns from him) and I am aſhamed of myſelf.

LOVEMORE.

Aſhamed! Love is a noble paſſion: but don't let me hear any more about it. Lady Conſtant will diſcover all, and then the blame will fall on me. If your heart revolts from her, don't let me be thought in league with you. You need not involve me in a quarrel with her ladyſhip.

SIR BASHFULL.

You don't take me right. You are wide, quite wide of the mark. Hear me out.

LOVEMORE.

No, no more. You muſt excuſe me.

SIR BASHFULL.

You ſhall hear me. The object of my paſſion, this charming woman, whom I doat on to diſtraction——

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Your pardon; I won't hear it---(walks away from him) When her ladyſhip hears of his gallantary, the devil is in the dice, if the ſpirit of revenge does not mould her to my purpoſes.

SIR BASHFULL. (following Lovemore)

I ſay, Mr. Lovemore, this adorable creaure——

LOVEMORE.

Keep your ſecret, Sir Baſhfull, (avoiding him)

SIR BASHFULL. (following him)

Who looks ſo lovely in my eyes——

LOVEMORE.

Well; I dont deſire to know her.

SIR BASHFULL.

You do know her. (following him) This idol of my heart,---is my own wife.

LOVEMORE (ſtares at him)

Your own wife?

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes, my own wife. (looks ſilly, and turns away) It's all over with me: I am undone.

LOVEMORE.

This is the moſt unexpected diſcovery.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Look ye there now; he laughs at me already.

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

His wife muſt not know this. The graſs is cut under my feet if ſhe ever hears a word of it.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

He is ſtruck with amazement, and does not ſay a word to me.

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

I muſt not encourage him.---And can this be poſſible, Sir Baſhfull?---In love with your own wife!

SIR BASHFULL.

Spare my confuſion. I have made myſelf very ridiculous. (Looks at him, and turns away) I know I have.

LOVEMORE.

Ridiculous? Far from it. Can it be wrong to love a valuable woman? Not to feel the impreſſions of beauty and of merit were downright inſenſibility; but then we ſhould always admire with diſcretion. The folly of us married men conſiſts, in letting our wives perceive the vehemence, with which we love; and the conſequence is, we are enſlaved for the reſt of our lives.---I could truſt you with a ſecret, which perhaps, would keep you in countenance. Could you imagine it? I love my wife.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

How?

LOVEMORE.

I am in love with my wife.

SIR BASHFULL.

Oh! no, no;---hey! (looking highly pleaſed) you make me laugh. You don't love her, do you?

LOVEMORE.

Paſſionately; tenderly; with all the ardour of affection.

SIR BASHFULL.

Give me your hand. Ha! ha!---I did not expect this. This is ſome relief. Ha! ha!- -you have made me happy. And have you led the life you have done all this time, on purpoſe to conceal your regard from her?

LOVEMORE.

For that very purpoſe. I eſteem her; I love her; but I would not have her know it.

SIR BASHFULL.

No?

LOVEMORE.

Upon no conſideration, nor would I have the world know it.

SIR BASHFULL.

Perfectly right.

LOVEMORE.

To be ſure. Tell your wife that you eſteem her good qualities, and admire her perſon, ſhe cries VICTORIA, falls to plundering, and then you muſt either break her chain, or wear it in the face of the world, a laughing ſtock for all your acquaintance.

SIR BASHFULL.

That is what I have always been afraid of.

LOVEMORE.

Not without reaſon. The world delights in ridicule. Do you know, if our ſecrets were to tranſpire, that we ſhould have nothing but wit, raillery, and ſleers, and taunts, flying about our ears?

SIR BASHFULL.

But I have taken good care. I have quarrelled with my lady ten times a day on purpoſe to cloak the affair, and prevent all ſuſpicion.

LOVEMORE.

Admirable! I commend your prudence. Beſides, —my Lady Conſtant, you know, has ſome youthful vigour about her; a graceful perſon, and an eye that inflames deſire; and deſire at your time of life, you know——

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Po! it is not for that; that is nothing. I wear admirably well, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

Do you?

SIR BASHFULL.

As young as ever: but I don't let her know it.

LOVEMORE.

Well! if you are diſcreet in that point, you are a very Machiavel!

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes, yes; I fight cunning. (laughs)

LOVEMORE.

Let nothing betray you. Be upon your guard: that is my own plan exactly. You want no advice from me.

SIR BASHFULL.

Pardon me: you can aſſiſt me.—My dear brother ſufferer, give me your hand. We can in a ſly way be of great uſe to each other.

LOVEMORE.

As how?

SIR BASHFULL.

I'll tell you. There are ſome things which you know our wives expect to be done.

LOVEMORE.

So there are.——(aſide) What the devil is he at now?

SIR BASHFULL.

Now if you will aſſiſt me——

LOVEMORE.

You may depend upon my aſſiſtance.

SIR BASHFULL.

Thus it is: my wife, you know, keeps a power of company, and makes a great figure there. I could ſhew her in any company in England: I wiſh ſhe could ſay the ſame of me.

LOVEMORE.

Why truly I wiſh ſhe could.

SIR BASHFULL.

But that's out of the queſtion. Now if you will come into my ſcheme—It muſt be a deep ſecret—— How? Is that Sir Brilliant's voice?

Enter SIR BRILLIANT.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Sir Baſhfull, you ſee what attraction you have. Lovemore, I did not expect to ſee you here.

LOVEMORE.

Nor did I expect you, Sir Brilliant. (aſide)

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Confuſion!——This unſeaſonable viſit——(aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

And your lady, is ſhe at home, Sir Baſhfull?

SIR BASHFULL.

Her own people keep that account, Sir: I know nothing of her.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Nay, never talk ſlightingly of a lady, who poſſeſſes ſo many elegant accompliſhments. She has ſpirit, ſenſe, wit and beauty.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

Spirit, ſenſe, wit and beauty! ſhe has them all, ſure enough.---Sir, I am no ſworn appraiſer to take an inventory of her effects.---(aſide) Hey, Lovemore? (looks at him and laughs)

LOVEMORE. (to Sir Baſhfull)

Vaſtly well!

SIR BRILLIANT.

Is her ladyſhip viſible this morning?

SIR BASHFULL.

Whether ſhe is viſible or not, is no buſineſs of mine, but I know ſhe is unintelligible this morning, and incomprehenſible this morning. She has the vapours; but your converſation I ſuppoſe will brighten her up for the reſt of the day.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Why, as it happens, I have the rareſt piece of news to communicate to her. Lovemore, you know Sir Amorous la Fool?

LOVEMORE.

He that was Sheriff the other day? Came up with an addreſs, and got himſelf knighted?

SIR BRILLIANT.

The ſame. He declared he would live with his friends upon the ſame familiar footing as before, and his new dignities ſhould make no alteration.

SIR BASHFULL.

I have ſeen the Knight. What of him?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Poor devil. He is in ſuch a ſcrape!

SIR BASHFULL.

What's the matter? Bubbled at play, I ſuppoſe.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Worſe, much worſe.

LOVEMORE.

He has been blackballed at one of the clubs?

SIR BASHFULL.

Or run through the body in a duel?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Why that's a ſcrape indeed: but it is not that.

SIR BASHFULL.

What then?

SIR BRILLIANT.

So unfortunate a diſcovery! he is fallen in love—I cannot help laughing at him.

LOVEMORE.

Po! fallen in love with ſome coquette, who plays off her airs, and makes a jeſt of him.

SIR BASHFULL.

A young actreſs may be, or an opera ſinger?

SIR BRILLIANT.

No, you will never gueſs. Sir Baſhfull,—like a ſilly devil, he is fallen in love with his own wife.

SIR BASHFULL.

Fallen in love with his own wife! (ſtares at him)

SIR BRILLIANT.

Yes; he has made up all quarrels; his jealouſy is at end, and he is to be upon his good behaviour for the reſt of his life.—Could you expect this, Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

No, Sir; neither I nor my friend Sir Baſhfull expected this.

SIR BASHFULL.

It is a ſtroke of ſurprize to me. (Looking uneaſy)

SIR BRILLIANT.

I heard it at my Lady Betty Scandal's, and we had ſuch a laugh: the whole company were in aſtoniſhment: whiſt ſtood ſtill; quadrille laid down the cards, and brag was in ſuſpenſe. Poor Sir Amorous! it is very ridiculous, is not it, Sir Baſhfull?

SIR BASHFULL.

Very ridiculous indeed.---(aſide) My own caſe exactly, and my friend Lovemore's too.

SIR BRILLIANT.

The man is loſt, undone, ruined, dead and buried.

LOVEMORE. (laughing)

He will never be able to ſhew his face after this diſcovery.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh, never; it's all over with him. Sir Baſhfull, this does not divert you; you don't enjoy it.

SIR BASHFULL.

Who I?---I---I---nothing can be more pleaſant, and---I---I laugh as heartily as I poſſibly can. (forcing a laugh.)

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

Lovemore, you remember Sir Amorous uſed to ſtrut, and talk big, and truly he did not care a pinch of ſnuff for his wife, not he; pretended to be as much at eaſe as Sir Baſhfull about his lady, and as much his own maſter as you yourſelf, or any man of pleaſure about town.

LOVEMORE.

I remember him: but as to Sir Baſhfull and myſelf, we know the world; we underſtand life.

SIR BASHFULL.

So we do; the world will never have ſuch a ſtory of us. Will they Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

Oh! we are free: we are out of the ſcrape.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Sir Amorous la Fool will be a proverb. Adieu for him the ſide-box whiſper, the ſoft aſſignation, and all the joys of freedom. He is retired with his Penelope, to love one another in the country; and next winter they will come to town, to hate one another.

SIR BASHFULL.

Do you think it will end ſo?

SIR BRILLIANT.

No doubt of it. That is always the denouement of modern matrimony. But I have not told you the worſt of his caſe. Our friend Sir Charles Wildfire, you know, was writing a comedy, and what do you think he has done? He has drawn the character of Sir Amorous, and made him the hero of the play.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

What put him into a comedy?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Even ſo: it is called "The Amorous Huſband; "or, The Man in Love with his own Wife." Oh! ho! ho! ho!

LOVEMORE.

We muſt ſend in time for places.
(laughs with Sir Brilliant)

SIR BASHFULL.

Lovemore carries it with an air. (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

Yes, we muſt ſecure places. Sir Baſhfull, you ſhall be of the party.

SIR BASHFULL.

The party will be very agreeable. I ſhall enjoy the joke prodigiouſly. Ha! ha! (forces a laugh)

LOVEMORE.

Yes, Sir Baſhfull, we ſhall reliſh the humour.
(looks at him and laughs)

SIR BRILLIANT.

The play will have a run: the people of faſhion will crowd after ſuch a character.—I muſt drive to a million of places and put it about; but firſt, with your leave, Sir Baſhfull, I will take the liberty to give give a hint of the affair to your lady. It will appear ſo ridiculous to her!

SIR BASHFULL.

Do you think it will?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Without doubt: ſhe has never met with any thing like it: has ſhe, Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

I fancy not: Sir Baſhfull, you take care of that.

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes, yes; I ſhall never be the town-talk.—Hey, Lovemore?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Well, I'll ſtep and pay my reſpects to my Lady Conſtant. Poor Sir Amorous! he will have his horns added to his coat of arms in a little time. Ha! ha! [Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

There, you ſee how it is. I ſhall get lampooned, be-rhymed, and niched into a comedy.

LOVEMORE.

Po! never be frightened at this. Nobody knows of your weakneſs but myſelf, and I can't betray your ſecret for my own ſake.

SIR BASHFULL.

Very true.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

This diſcovery ſhews the neceſſity of concealing our loves. We muſt act with caution. Give my Lady no reaſon to ſuſpect that you have the leaſt regard for her.

SIR BASHFULL.

Not for the world.

LOVEMORE.

Keep to that.

SIR BASHFULL.

I have done her a thouſand kindneſſes, but all by ſtealth; all in a fly way.

LOVEMORE.

Have you?

SIR BASHFULL.

Oh! a multitude. I'll tell you.—She has been plaguing me a long time for an addition to her jewels. She wants a diamond croſs, and a better pair of diamond buckles. Madam, ſays I, I will have no ſuch trumpery; but then goes I and beſpeaks them of the firſt jeweller in town.—All under the roſe. The buckles are finiſhed: worth five hundred! She will have them this very day, without knowing from what quarter they come.—I can't but laugh at the contrivance—the man that brings them, will run away directly, without ſaying a word.

(laughs heartily)

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Sly, ſly.—You know what you are about.

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay, let me alone——(laughs with Lovemore) And then, to cover the deſign ſtill more, when I ſee her wear her baubles, I can take occaſion to be as jealous as bedlam.

LOVEMORE.

So you can: ha! ha!---(aſide) I wiſh he may never be jealous of me in good earneſt.

SIR BASHFULL.

Give me your hand. (Looks at him and laughs) I am ſafe I think.

LOVEMORE. (laughing with him)

Perfectly ſafe---(aſide) if it was not for his own folly.

SIR BASHFULL.

But I was telling you, Mr. Lovemore:---we can be of eſſential uſe to each other.

LOVEMORE.

As how pray?

SIR BASHFULL.

Why, my lady is often in want of money. It would be ridiculous in me to ſupply her. Now if you will take the money from me, and pretend to lend it to her, out of friendſhip, you know——

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Nothing can be better—(aſide) Here is a fellow pimping for his own horns.—I ſhall be glad to ſerve you.

SIR BASHFULL.

I am for ever obliged to you—here, here; take it now—here it is in bank notes—one, two, three; there is three hundred—give her that, and tell her you have more at her ſervice to morrow or next day, if her occaſions require it.

LOVEMORE.

My good friend, to oblige you (takes the money) this is the rareſt adventure!

SIR BASHFULL.

I'll do any thing for you in return.

LOVEMORE.

I ſhall have occaſion for your friendſhip—that is to forgive me, if you find me out. (aſide)

SIR BASHFULL.

Loſe no time; ſtep to her now—hold, hold; Sir Brilliant is with her.

LOVEMORE.

I can diſmiſs him. Rely upon my friendſhip: I will make her ladyſhip eaſy for you.

SIR BASHFULL.

It will be kind of you.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

It ſhall be her own fault if I don't.

SIR BASHFULL.

A thouſand thanks to you—well, is not this the rareſt project?

LOVEMORE.

It is the neweſt way——of ſatisfying a man's wife!

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay! let this head of mine alone.

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

Not if I can help it? Huſh!---I hear Sir Brilliant; he is coming down ſtairs. I'll take this opportunity, and ſtep to her ladyſhip now.

SIR BASHFULL.

Do ſo, do ſo.

LOVEMORE.

I am gone. (aſide) Who can blame me now if I cuckold this fellow? [Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

Proſper you, proſper you, Mr. Lovemore. Make me thankfull: he is a true friend. I don't know what I ſhould do without him.

Enter

Enter SIR BRILLIANT.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Sir Baſhfull, how have you managed this?

SIR BASHFULL.

I have nó art, no management. What's the matter?

SIR BRILLIANT.

I don't know what you have done, but your lady laughs till ſhe is ready to expire at what I have been telling her.

SIR BASHFULL.

And ſhe thinks Sir Amorous la Fool an object of ridicule?

SIR BRILLIANT.

She does not give credit to a ſingle ſyllable of the ſtory. A man that loves his wife would be a Phœnix indeed! Such a thing might exiſt formerly, but in this poliſhed age is no where to be found. That's her opinion of the matter.

SIR BASHFULL. (laughs)

A whimſical notion of her's! and ſo ſhe thinks you may go about with a lanthorn to find a man that ſets any value upon his wife?

SIR BRILLIANT.

You have managed to convince her of it. How the devil do you contrive to govern ſo fine a woman? I know ſeveral, without her pretenſions, who have long long ago thrown of all reſtraint. You keep up your own dignity.

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes, I know what I am about.

SIR BRILLIANT.

You!—you are quite in the faſhion.—Apropos; I fancy I ſhall want you to afford me your aſſiſtance. You know my Lady Charlotte Modelove? She has a taſte for the Theatre: at Bell Grove-place ſhe has an elegant ſtage, where her ſelect friends amuſe themſelves now and then with a repreſentation of certain comic pieces. We ſhall there act the new comedy, but we apprehend ſome difficulty in the arrangement of the ſeveral characters. Now you ſhall act Sir Amorous, and——

SIR BASHFULL.

I act, Sir?—I know nothing of the character.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Po! ſay nothing of that. In time you may reach the ridiculous abſurdity of it, and play it as well as another.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

Confuſion! he does not ſuſpect, I hope—divert yourſelves, Sir, as you may; but not at my expence—I promiſe you.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Never be ſo abrupt. Who knows but Lady Conſtant may be the happy wife, the Cara Sposa of the piece! and then, you in love with her, and ſhe laughing at you for it, will give a zeſt to the humour, which everybody will reliſh in the moſt exquiſite degree.

SIR BASHFULL.

Po! this is too much. You are very pleaſant, but you won't eaſily get me to play the fool.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Well, conſider of it. I ſhall be delighted to ſee my friend Sir Baſhfull tied to his wife's apron-ſtring, and with a languiſhing look melting away in admiration of her charms. Oh! ho! ho! ho!—adieu; a l'honneur; good morning, Sir Baſhfull. [Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

I don't know what to make of all this: But there is no danger. As long as no body knows it, I may venture to love my wife. There will be no harm, while the ſecret is kept as cloſe as night, concealed in tenfold darkneſs, from the wits and ſcoffers of the age.

Enter LOVEMORE.

SIR BASHFULL.

Well, well?—how have you managed?

LOVEMORE.

As I could wiſh: ſhe is infinitely obliged to me, and will never forget the civility.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

A thouſand thanks to you. I am not ſuſpected?

LOVEMORE.

She has not a diſtant idea of you in this buſineſs: ſhe was rather delicate at firſt, and heſitated, and thought it an indecorum to accept of money even from a friend. But that objection ſoon vaniſhed. I told her it is but too viſible that ſhe is unfortunately yoked with a husband, whoſe humour will never be ſoftened down to the leaſt compliance with her inclinations.

SIR BASHFULL.

That was well ſaid, and had a good effect, I hope.

LOVEMORE.

I hope ſo too.

SIR BASHFULL.

It helps to carry on the plot, you know.

LOVEMORE.

Admirably; it puts things in the train I wiſh.

SIR BASHFULL.

And ſo, to cover the deſign, you gave me the worſt of characters.

LOVEMORE.

I painted you in terrible colours.

SIR BASHFULL.

Do ſo allways, and ſhe will never ſuſpect me of being privy to any civility you may ſhew her.

LOVEMORE.

I would not have you know any thing of my being civil to her for the world. I have ſucceeded thus far. I talked a few muſty ſentences, ſuch as, the perſon, who receives a civility, confers the obligation, and ſo with ſome reluctance ſhe complied at laſt, and things are now upon the footing I would have them. —Death and fury! there comes my wife.

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay, and here comes my wife.

LOVEMORE.

What the devil brings her hither?

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

Now, now; now let me ſee how he will carry it before Mrs. Lovemore.—Walk in, madam! walk in Mrs. Lovemore.

Enter Mrs. LOVEMORE, and LADY CONSTANT, at oppoſite doors.

LADY CONSTANT.

Mrs. Lovemore, to ſee you abroad is a novelty indeed.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

As great perhaps as that of finding your ladyſhip at home. Mr. Lovemore, I did not expect to have the pleaſure of meeting you.

LOVEMORE.

Then we are both agreeably ſurprized.

SIR BASHFULL.

Now mind how he behaves. (aſide)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I thought you were gone to you city-banker.

LOVEMORE.

And you find that you are miſtaken. I have deferred it till the evening—(aſide) 'Sdeath! to be teazed in this manner.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

No, no; he won't drop the maſk. (Looks at Lady Conſtant) She has touched the caſh; I can ſee the bank-notes ſparkling in her eyes.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

If you don't go into the city till the evening, may I hope for your company at dinner, Mr. Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

The queſtion is entertaining, but as it was ſettled this morning, I think it has loſt the graces of novelty.

SIR BASHFULL.

He won't let her have the leaſt ſuſpicion of his regard. (aſide)

LADY CONSTANT.

I dare ſay Mr. Lovemore will dine at home, if it conduces to your happineſs, Ma'am; and Sir Baſhfull, I take it, will dine at home for the contrary reaſon.

SIR BASHFULL.

Madam, I will dine at home, or I will dine abroad, for what reaſon I pleaſe, and it is my pleaſure to give no reaſon for either.——Lovemore! (looks at him and ſmiles)

LOVEMORE (aſide to Sir Baſhfull.)

Bravo! what a blockhead it is?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

As you have your chariot at the door, Mr. Lovemore, if you have no objection, I will ſend away my chair, and you may do me the honour of a place in your carriage.

LOVEMORE.

The honour will be very great to me, but——ſo many places to call at.—If I had known this ſooner——You had better keep your chair.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

Cunning! cunning! he would not be ſeen in his chariot chariot with her for the world. He has more diſcretion than I have.

LADY CONSTANT.

Mrs. Lovemore, ſince you have at laſt ventured to come abroad, I hope you will think it a change for the better. You are too domeſtick. I ſhall expect now to ſee you often: and apropos, I am to have a rout to-morrow evening; if you will do me the honour of your company——.

SIR BASHFULL.

A rout to-morrow evening! you have a rout every evening, I think. Learn of Mrs. Lovemore; imitate her example, and don't let me have your hurricane months all the year round in my houſe.—Hip! (aſide) Lovemore, how do you like me?

LOVEMORE. (aſide to Sir Baſhfull)

You improve upon it every time. But I am loitering here as if I had nothing to do.—My Lady Conſtant, I have the honour to wiſh your ladyſhip a good morning. Sir Baſhfull, your's.—Madam---(bows gravely to Mrs. Lovemore, hums a tune and Exit)

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

He knows how to play the game. I'll try what I can do. Mrs. Lovemore, I have the honour to wiſh you a good morning. Madam---(bows gravely to Lady Conſtant, hums a tune, and Exit)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Two ſuch huſbands!

LADY CONSTANT.

As to my ſwain, I grant you: Mr. Lovemore is at leaſt well-bred; he has an underſtanding, and may in time reflect. Sir Baſhfull never qualifies himſelf with the ſmalleſt tincture of civility.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

If civility can qualify the draught, I muſt allow Mr. Lovemore to have a ſkilful hand. But there is no end of his projects. Every day opens a new ſcene. Another of his intrigues is come to light. I came to conſult with your ladyſhip. I know you are acquainted with the widow Bellmour.

LADY CONSTANT.

The widow Bellmour? I know her perfectly well.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Not ſo well, perhaps, as you may imagine. She has thrown out the lure for my wild gallant, and in order to deceive me——

LADY CONSTANT.

My dear, you muſt be miſtaken. Who tells you this?

Mrs LOVEMORE.

Oh! I can truſt to my intelligence. Sir Brilliant Faſhion, by way of blind to me, has been this morning drawing ſo amiable a picture of the lady—

LADY

LADY CONSTANT.

Sir Brilliant's authority is not always the beſt, but in this point, you may truſt to him.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

But when you have heard all the circumſtances—

LADY CONSTANT.

Depend upon it, you are wrong. I know the widow Bellmour. Her turn of character, and way of thinking——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Excuſe me, Madam. You decide without hearing me.

LADY CONSTANT.

All ſcandal, take my word for it. However, let me hear your ſtory. We'll adjourn to my dreſſing-room, if you will; and I promiſe to confute all you can ſay.—I would have you know the widow Bellmour: you will be in love with her.—My dear Madam, have not you a tinge of jealouſy?—Beware of that malady. If you ſee things through that medium, I ſhall give you up;

That jaundice of the mind, whoſe colours ſtrike
On friend and foe, and paint them all alike

End of the SECOND ACT.

ACT

ACT the THIRD.

Scene, an Apartment at the Widow BELLMOUR's: ſeveral chairs, a toilette, a book-caſe, and a harpſichord diſpoſed up and down.

MIGNIONET. (putting things in order.)

I Don't well know what to make of this ſame Lord Etheridge. He is coming here again to-day, I ſuppoſe: all this neatneſs, and all this care muſt be for him.—Well, it does not ſignify: (arranging the chairs) there is a pleaſure in obeying Madam Bellmour. She is a ſweet lady, that's the truth of it.---'Twere a pity any of theſe men, with their deceitfull arts, ſhould draw her into a ſnare.---But ſhe knows them all. They muſt riſe early who can outwit her.

(ſettling the toilette)

Enter Mrs. BELLMOUR, reading.

Oh! bleſt with temper, whoſe unclouded ray
Can make to-morrow chearfull as to-day;
She who can own a ſiſter's charms, and hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear;
That never anſwers till a huſband cools,
And if ſhe rules him, never ſhews the rules.

Senſible, elegant Pope!

Charms by accepting, by ſubmitting ſways,
Yet has her humour moſt, when ſhe obeys.

(ſeems to read on)

MIG-

MIGNIONET.

Lord love my miſtreſs! always ſo charming, ſo gay, and ſo happy!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Theſe exquiſite characters of women! they are a ſort of painters gallery, where one ſees the portraits of all one's acquaintance, and ſometimes we ſee our own features too. Mignionet, put this book in it's place.

MIGNIONET.

Yes, ma'am; and there's your toilet looks as elegant as hands can make it.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Does it? I think it does. You have ſome taſte. Apropos, where is my new ſong?——Oh! here it is: I muſt make myſelf miſtreſs of it (plays upon the harpſichord and ſings a little) I believe, I have conquered it, (riſes and goes to her toilet) This hair is always tormenting me, always in diſorder: this lock muſt be for ever gadding out of it's place. I muſt and will ſubdue it,---Do you know, Mignionet, that this is a very pretty ſong? It was writ by my Lord Etheridge. My Lord has a turn. (ſings a little). I muſt be perfect before he comes. (hums the tune). Do you know that I think my Lord is one of thoſe men, who may be endured?

MIGNIONET.

Yes, Ma'am, I know you think ſo.

Mrs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Do you?

MIGNIONET.

And if I have any ſkill, Ma'am, you are not without a little partiality for his lordſhip.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Really? Then you think I like him perhaps. Do you think I like him? I don't well know how that is. Like him! no, not abſolutely; it is not decided: and yet I don't know, if I had a mind to humour myſelf, and to give way a little to inclination, there is ſomething here in my heart that would be buſy, I believe.---The man has a ſoftneſs of manner, a turn of wit, and does not want ſentiment. Can I call it ſentiment? Yes, I think I may. He has ſentiment; and then he knows the manners, the uſage of the world, and he points out the ridicule of things with ſo much humour!

MIGNIONET.

You'll be caught, Ma'am; I ſee that.---To be ſure, my lord has a quality-air, and can make himſelf agreeable. But what of that? You know but very little of him. Is a man's character known in three or four week's time? (Mrs. Bellmour hums a tune) Do, my dear madam, mind what I ſay: I am at times very conſiderate. I make my remarks, and I ſee very plainly——Lord, ma'am, what am I doing? I am talking to you for your own good, and you are all in the air, and no more mind me, no, no more than if I was nothing at all.

Mrs. LOVEMORE. (continues humming a tune)

You talk wonderfully well upon the ſubject; but as

as I know how the cards lie, and can play the beſt of the game; and as I have a ſong to amuſe me, one is inclined to give muſical nonſenſe the preference.

MIGNIONET.

I aſſure you, ma'am, I am not one of thoſe ſervants, that bargain for their miſtreſs's inclinations: but you are a going to take a leap in the dark. What does my Lord Etheridge mean, with his chair always brought into the hall, and the curtains cloſe about his ears? Why does he not he come like himſelf, and not care who ſees him? There's ſome myſtery at the bottom, I'll be ſworn there is; and ſo you'll find at laſt.—Dear heart, Ma'am! if you are determined not to liſten, what ſignifies my living with you? At this rate, I am of no ſervice to you.

MRS. BELLMOUR.

There;—I have conquered my ſong. (runs to her glaſs) How do I look to day? The eyes do well enough, I think.—And ſo Mignionet, you imagine I ſhall play the fool, and marry my Lord Etheridge?

MIGNIONET.

You have it through the very heart of you: I ſee that.

MRS. BELLMOUR.

Do you?—I don't know what to ſay to it. Poor Sir Brilliant Faſhion! if I prefer his rival, what will become of him?—I won't think about it.

Enter

Enter POMPEY.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

What the matter, Pompey?

POMPEY.

A lady in a chair desires to know if your ladyship is at home?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Has the lady no name?

POMPEY.

Yes; I fancies she has, ma'am; but she did not tell it.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

How aukward!—well, shew the lady up-stairs.

MIGNIONET.

Had not you better receive her in the drawing-room, ma'am? I have not half done my business here.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! you have done very well. There will be less formality here. I dare say it is some intimate acquaintance, though that foolish boy does not recollect her name.—Here she comes. I don't know her.

Enter Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Mrs. LOVEMORE. (disconcerted)

I beg pardon for this intrusion.

Mrs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Pray walk in, ma'am. Mignionet, reach a chair. (Mrs. Lovemore croſſes the ſtage, and they ſalute each other with an air of diſtant civility)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I am afraid this viſit from one, who has not the honour of knowing you——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh make no apology, ma'am.---Mignionet you may withdraw. (Exit Mignionet)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

It may appear extraordinary that a ſtranger thus intrudes upon you;—but a particular circumſtance determined me to take this liberty. I hope you will excuſe the freedom.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

You do me honour, ma'am; pray no excuſes. A particular circumſtance, you ſay?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I ſhall appear, perhaps, very ridiculous, and indeed I am afraid I have done the moſt abſurd thing! but a lady of your acquaintance—you know my lady Conſtant, ma'am?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Extremely well.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

She has given you ſuch an amiable character for bene-benevolence and a certain elegant way of thinking, entirely your own, that I flatter myſelf, if it is in your power, you will be generous enough to afford me your aſſiſtance.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Lady Conſtant is very obliging. Make a trial of me, ma'am, and if I can be of any uſe——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I fear I ſhall aſk you a ſtrange queſtion:---are you acquainted with a gentleman of the name of Lovemore?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Lovemore? No ſuch name in my liſt.---Lovemore? No;---I recollect no ſuch perſon. The circle of my acquaintance is ſmall: I am almoſt a ſtranger in town.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

That makes an end, Ma'am. I beg your pardon. I have given you an unneceſſary trouble. (going)

Mrs. BELLMOUR. (aſide)

Mighty odd this! her manner is intereſting.---You have given me no trouble, but my curioſity is excited. (takes her by the hand) I beg you will keep your chair. Pray be ſeated.---What can this mean? (aſide) Will you be ſo good as to inform me, who the gentleman is?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

The ſtory will be unintereſting to you, and to me it it is painfull. My grievances——(puts her handkerchief to her eyes).

Mrs. Bellmour. (aſide)

Her grief affects me. (looks at her till ſhe has recovered herſelf) I would not importune too much--

Mrs. Lovemore.

You have ſuch an air of frankneſs and generoſity, that I will open myſelf without reſerve: I have the tendereſt regard for Mr. Lovemore: I have been married to him theſe two years. I admired his underſtanding, his ſenſibility, and his ſpirit. My heart was his; I loved him with unbounded paſſion. I thought the flame was mutual, and, you may believe I was happy. But of late, there is ſuch a revolution in his temper! I know not what to make of it. I am doomed to be unhappy.

Mrs. Bellmour.

Perhaps not: you may ſtill have much in your power.

Mrs. Lovemore.

My power is at an end. Inſtead of the looks of affection, and the expreſſions of tenderneſs, with which he uſed to meet me, it is nothing now but cold, averted, ſuperficial civility; while abroad he runs on in a wild career of pleaſure, and to my deep affliction, has attached himſelf entirely to another object.

Mrs. Bellmour.

And if I had known Mr. Lovemore, do you imagine that my advice or perſuaſion would avail you any thing?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I had ſuch a fancy. (aſide) What can I think of her?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

You are much miſtaken. In theſe caſes friends may interpoſe, but what can they do? They recommend a wife to the good will, the honour, and generoſity of her huſband. But when a woman, who ſhould be eſteemed and loved, is recommended as an object of compaſſion, ſhe is humbled indeed: it is all over with her. A wife ſhould recommend herſelf by the graces of her perſon, and the variety of her talents. Men will prove falſe, and if there is nothing in your complaint but mere gallantry on his ſide, I proteſt I do not ſee that your caſe is ſo very bad.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Can it be worſe, Ma'am?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

A great deal.—If his affections, inſtead of being alienated, had been extinguiſhed, what would be the conſequence?—A downright, ſullen, habitual inſenſibility. From that lethargy of affection a man is not eaſily recalled. In all Love's bill of mortality there is not a more fatal diſorder. But this is not the caſe with Mr. Lovemore: by your account, he ſtill has ſentiment; and where there is ſentiment, there is room to hope for an alteration.—But where the heart has loſt it's feeling, you have the pain of finding yourſelf neglected; and for what? The man is grown ſtupid, and to the warm beams of wit and beauty, as impenetrable as an ice-houſe.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

That is not my complaint. I have to do with one, who is too ſuſceptible of impreſſions from every beautiful object that comes in his way.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Why, ſo much the better. A new idea ſtrikes his fancy. He is inconſtant, but after wavering and fluttering, he may ſettle at laſt.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

How light ſhe makes of it! She apologizes for him! (aſide)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

And perhaps, the fault is on the woman's ſide.—

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

The virtue of my conduct, Madam—

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! I would have laid my life you would be at that work. But virtue is not the queſtion at preſent. I ſuppoſe virtue; that is always underſtood. The fault I mean, is the want of due attention to the art of pleaſing. It is there that moſt women fail. In theſe times, virtue alone may be its own reward.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

But after being married ſo long, and behaving all the time with ſuch an equality—

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Ay, that equality is the rock ſo many ſplit upon. The men will change; they love variety. Excuſe my freedom. Do you know your rival?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

There I own I am ſomewhat puzzled.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Never throw up the cards for all that. Take my advice, Ma'am.—Employ but half the pains you now uſe perhaps in teazing yourſelf, to vie with the perſon who has ſtruck your huſband's fancy,—to vie with her, I ſay, in the arts of pleaſing; do this, and victory is your's. If I judge right, you have qualities that may diſpute his heart with any body.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You are pleaſed to compliment.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! by no means; but you muſt exert yourſelf. It is the wife's buſineſs to bait the hook for her huſband with variety. Virtue alone will not do it. Vice puts on allurements: why ſhould not truth and innocence do the ſame? That is the whole affair, Ma'am: I would not make myſelf uneaſy.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Not uneaſy, when a wild, ungrateful libertine—

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Give me leave. I have been married, and am a little little in the ſecret.—To win a heart is eaſy; to keep it the difficulty. After the fatal words "for better, "for worſe," women in general relax into indolence, and while they are guilty of no infidelity, they think every thing is right. But they are miſtaken: a great deal is wanting; an addreſs, vivacity, a deſire to pleaſe.—A favourite poet,—Prior he expreſſed it with delicacy:

Above the fix'd and ſettled rules
Of vice and virtue in the ſchools,
The better part ſhould ſet before 'em
A grace, a manner, a decorum.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

But when the natural temper——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! the natural temper muſt be forced. Home muſt be made a place of pleaſure to the huſband. How is that to be done? Virtue of itſelf will not pleaſe the taſte of this age; and that equality, which you talk of, is a ſameneſs that palls and wearies. A wife ſhould throw infinite variety into her manner. She ſhould, as it were, multiply herſelf, and ſhew a number of different women collected in her own perſon. The grave, the gay, the tender, affectionate, witty, ſilent, and talkative, all in their turns, all ſhifting the ſcene, and ſhe ſucceeding to herſelf as quick as lightening. And this I take to be the whole myſtery; the way to keep a man.—But I beg your pardon. I go on too faſt: you will think me the giddieſt creature.

43814

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Quite the reverſe, Ma'am; you are ſo obliging.—(aſide) Sir Brilliant has told me truth, I believe.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I have tired myſelf and you too.—But pray, may I now enquire, who was ſo kind as to intimate that I am acquainted with Mr. Lovemore?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

It was a mere miſtake. I have given you a great deal of trouble. You will excuſe my frankneſs; I had heard that his viſits were frequent here.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

His viſits frequent here! My Lady Conſtant could not tell you ſo?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

She told me quite the contrary. She knows your amiable qualities, and does you juſtice.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

The accident is lucky: it has procured me the honour of your acquaintance. And I ſuppoſe you imagined that I had robbed you of Mr. Lovemore's heart?—Scandal will be buzzing about. I can laugh at every thing of that ſort. (a rap at the door) Oh! Heavens! ſome troubleſome viſit.—

(rings a bell)

Enter

Enter MIGNIONET.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I am not at home. Go, and give an anſwer.

MIGNIONET.

It is Lord Etheridge, Ma'am: he is coming up ſtairs. The ſervants did not know you had changed your mind.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Was ever any thing ſo croſs? Tell his Lordſhip I have company; I am buſy; I am not well; any thing, don't let him come in. Make haſte, diſpatch: I won't ſee him.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I beg I may not hinder you: I ſhall take my leave.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

By no means. Our converſation grows intereſting. I poſitively will not ſee my Lord.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I can't agree to that. You muſt ſee his Lordſhip. I can ſtep into another room.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Will you be ſo good?—You will find ſomething to amuſe you in that cabinet. (points to a door in the back ſcene) We muſt talk further. My Lord ſhan't ſtay long.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Nay, but if you ſtand upon ceremony——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Very well: I'll contrive it. This is a lover of mine. A lover and a huſband are the ſame thing. Perhaps it will divert you to hear how I manage him. I hear him on the ſtairs. Make haſte: Mignionet ſhew the way. (Mrs. Lovemore and Mignionet go out at the back ſcene)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Let me ſee how I look to receive him.
(runs to her glaſs)

Enter LOVEMORE, with a Star and Garter, as LORD ETHERIDGE.

LOVEMORE.

A heav'nly image in the glaſs appears,
To that ſhe bends, to that her eyes ſhe rears,
Repairs her ſmiles——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Repairs her ſmiles, my Lord! You are ſatirical this morning. Pray, my Lord, are my features out of repair, like an old houſe in the country, that wants a tenant?

LOVEMORE.

Nay, now you wreſt the words from their viſible intention. You can't ſuppoſe that I impute to ſuch perfect beauty the leaſt want of repair, whatever may may be the caſe, Ma'am, with regard to the want of a tenant.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! then your opinion is, that I want a tenant. And perhaps you think I am going to put up a bill to ſignify to all paſſers-by, that here is a manſion to be let, enquire of the widow Blackacre. I like your notion; I don't think it would be a bad ſcheme. Shall I try it?

LOVEMORE.

A palace needs no ſuch invitation. It's natural beauty attracts admiring eyes. But who can bid up to the price? The perſon who is able to do it—

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Will be happy; I know that is what you are going to ſay. But he muſt do homage for it; and then I will let it to none but a ſingle gentleman. Do you know any body, whom thoſe conditions will ſuit?

LOVEMORE.

Thoſe conditions, Ma'am——(aſide) What the devil does ſhe mean? I am not detected, I hope. ——To be ſure, Ma'am, thoſe conditions—And—none but ſingle gentlemen will preſume to——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

And then it muſt be a leaſe for life. But that will never do. Nobody will be troubled with it. I ſhall never get it off my hands: do you think I ſhall, my Lord?

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

There muſt be very little taſte left, if you have not a number of bidders. You know the ambition of my heart; you know I am devoted to you, upon any terms, even though it were to be bought with life.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Heavens! what a dying ſwain you are! And does your Lordſhip mean to be guilty of matrimony? Lord! what a queſtion have I aſked? To be ſure I am the giddieſt creature. My Lord, don't you think me a ſtrange madcap?

LOVEMORE.

A vein of wit, like your's, that ſprings at once from vivacity and ſentiment, ſerves to exalt your beauty, and give animation to every charm.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Upon my word, you have ſaid it finely!—But you are in the right, my Lord. Your penſive, melancholy beauty is the moſt inſipid thing in nature. And yet we often ſee features without a mind; and the owner of them ſits in the room with you, like a mere vegetable, for an hour together, till at laſt ſhe is incited to the violent exertion of, "Yes, Sir"——"I fancy not, Ma'am," and then a matter of fact converſation! "Miſs Beverley is going to "be married to Captain Shoulder-Knot—My Lord "Mortgage has had another tumble at Hazard— "Sir Harry Wilding has loſt his election—They ſay "ſhort-aprons are coming into faſhion."

LOVEMORE.

Oh! a matter of fact converſation is inſupportable.

MRS. BELLMOUR.

But you meet with nothing elſe. All in great ſpirits about nothing, and not an idea among them. Go to Ranelagh, or to what public place you will, it is juſt the ſame. A lady comes up to you; "How charmingly you look!---But my dear M'em, did you hear what happened to us the other night?---We were going home from the Opera---you know my aunt Roly-Poly; it was her coach. There was ſhe and Lady Betty Fidget---What a ſweet blonde! How do you do, my dear? (curtſying as to another going by) My Lady Betty is quite recovered; we were all frightened about her; but Doctor Snake-root was called in; no, not Doctor Snake-root, Doctor Bolus; and ſo he altered the courſe of the medicines, and ſo my Lady Betty is purely now.—Well, there was ſhe, and my aunt, and Sir George Bragwell—a pretty man Sir George—fineſt teeth in the world—Your Ladyſhip's moſt obedient—(curtſying) We expected you laſt night, but you did not come.—He! he! he!—And ſo there was Sir George and the reſt of us; and ſo turning the corner of Bond-ſtreet, the brute of a coachman—I humbly thank your Grace (curtſys)---the brute of a coachman overturned us, and ſo my aunt Roly-Poly was frighted out of her wits; and Lady Betty has had her nerves again. Only think! ſuch accidents!---I am glad to ſee you look ſo well; a l'honneur; he! he! he!"

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Ho! ho! you paint to the life. I ſee her moving before me in all her airs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

With this converſation their whole ſtock is exhauſted, and away they run to cards. Quadrille has murdered wit!

LOVEMORE.

Ay, and beauty too. Cards are the worſt enemies to a complection: the ſmall-pox is not ſo bad. The paſſions throw themſelves into every feature: I have ſeen the countenance of an angel changed, in a moment, to abſolute deformity: the little loves and graces, that ſparkled in the eye, bloomed in the cheek, and ſmiled about the mouth, all wing their flight, and leave the face, which they before adorned, a prey to grief, to anger, malice, and fury, and the whole train of fretful paſſions.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

And the language of the paſſions is ſometimes heard upon thoſe occaſions.

LOVEMORE.

Very true, Ma'am; and if by chance they do bridle and hold in a little, the ſtruggle they undergo is the moſt ridiculous ſight in nature. I have ſeen a huge oath quivering on the pale lip of a reigning toaſt for half an hour together, and an uplifted eye accuſing the gods for the loſs of an odd trick. And then, at laſt, the whole room is a babel of ſounds. "My Lord, you flung away the game.—Sir George, why

" why did not you rough the ſpade?---Captain Ha-
" zard, why did not you lead through the honour?
" ---Ma'am it was not the play---pardon me Sir---
" but ma'am,---but Sir---I would not play with you
" for ſtraws; don't you know what Hoyle ſays?---
" If A and B are partners againſt C and D, and
" the game nine all, A and B have won three tricks,
" and C and D four tricks; C leads his ſuit, D
" puts up the King, then returns the ſuit; A paſſes,
" C puts up the queen, and B trumps it; and ſo
" A and B and C and D are bandied about;" they attack, they defend, and all is jargon, and confuſion, wrangling, noiſe, and nonſenſe; and high life, and polite converſation.——Ha! ha! ha!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Ho! ho! the pencil of Hogarth could not do it better. And yet one is dragged to theſe places. One muſt play ſometimes. We muſt let our friends pick our pockets now and then, or they drop our acquaintance. Do you ever play, my Lord?

LOVEMORE.

Play, Ma'am?—(aſide) What does ſhe mean? I muſt play the hypocrite to the end of the chapter. —Play?—Now and then, as you ſay one muſt; to oblige, and from neceſſity; but from taſte, or inclination, no; I never touch a card.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! very true; I forgot. You dedicate your time to the Muſes; a downright rhyming Peer. Do you know, my Lord, that I am charmed with your ſong?

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Are you?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Abſolutely; and I really think you would make an admirable Vauxhall poet.

LOVEMORE.

Nay, now you flatter me.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

No, as I live; it is very pretty. And do you know that I can ſing it already? Come, you ſhall hear how I murder it. I have no voice to-day, but you ſhall hear me. (Sings.)

I.

Attend all ye fair, and I'll tell you the art
To bind ev'ry fancy with eaſe in your chains;
To hold in ſoft fetters the conjugal heart,
And baniſh from HYMEN his doubts and his pains.

II.

When Juno was deck'd with the Ceſtus of Love,
At firſt ſhe was handſome; ſhe charming became:
With ſkill the ſoft paſſions it taught her to move,
To kindle at once, and to keep up the flame.

III.

'Tis this gives the eyes all their magic and fire,
The voice melting accents; impaſſions the kiſs;
Confers the ſweet ſmile, that awakens deſire,
And plants round the fair each incentive to bliſs.

Thence

IV.

Thence flows the gay chat, more than reaſon that charms;
The eloquent bluſh, that can beauty improve;
The fond ſigh, the fond vow; the ſoft touch that alarms;
The tender diſdain, the renewal of love.

V.

Ye fair, take the Ceſtus, and practice it's pow'r:
The mind unaccompliſh'd, mere features are vain;
With wit, with good humour enliven each hour,
And the loves, and the graces ſhall walk in your train.

LOVEMORE.

My poetry is infinitely obliged to you. It grows into ſenſe, as you ſing it. Your voice, like the Ceſtus of Venus, beſtows a grace upon every thing.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! fulſome! I ſing horridly. (goes to the glaſs) How do I look?—Don't tell me, my Lord; you are ſtudying a compliment, but I am reſolved to mortify you; I won't hear it.—Well! have you thought of any thing? Let it paſs; it's too late now. Pray, my Lord, how came you to chooſe ſo grave a ſubject as connubial happineſs?

LOVEMORE.

Cloſe and particular that queſtion! (aſide)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Juno! Hymen! doubts and pains! one would almoſt ſwear that you have a wife at home, who ſat for the picture.

LOVEMORE.

Ma'am, the—(embarraſſed) The compliment—you are only laughing at me—the ſubject, from every day's experience——(aſide) Does ſhe ſuſpect me? ——the ſubject is common—Batchelors wives, you know——ha! ha!——And when you inſpire the thought; when you are the bright original, it is no wonder that the copy——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Horrid! going to harp on the old ſtring. Odious ſollicitations! I hate all propoſals. I am not in the humour. You muſt releaſe me now: your viſit is rather long. I have indulged you a great while. And beſides, were I to liſten to your vows, what would become of poor Sir Brilliant Faſhion?

LOVEMORE.

Sir Brilliant Faſhion?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Do you know him?

LOVEMORE.

I know whom you mean. I have ſeen him; but that's all. He lives with a ſtrange ſet, and does not move in my ſphere. If he is a friend of your's, I have no more to ſay.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Is there any thing to ſay againſt him?

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Nay, I have no knowledge of the gentleman. They who know him beſt, don't rate him high. A ſort of current coin that paſſes in this town. You will do well to beware of counterfeits.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

But this is very alarming——

Enter MIGNIONET, in a violent hurry.

MIGNIONET.

My dear madam, I am frighted out of my ſenſes. The poor Lady—where are the heartſhorn drops?

LOVEMORE.

The lady! what lady?

MIGNIONET.

Never ſtand aſking what lady. She has fainted away all on a ſudden: ſhe is now in ſtrong hyſtericks; give me the drops.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I muſt run to her aſſiſtance. Adieu, my Lord. I ſhall be at home in the evening. Mignionet, ſtep this way. Your Lordſhip will excuſe me: I ſhall expect to ſee you. Come, Mignionet; make haſte; make haſte. [Exit with Mignionet.

LOVEMORE.

I hope the lady has not overheard me. What a villain am I to carry on this ſcheme againſt ſo much beauty, innocence, and merit? And to wear this badge of honour for the darkeſt purpoſes? And then my friend Sir Brilliant, will it be fair to ſupplant him?---Prithee, be quiet, my dear conſcience! none of your meddling; don't interrupt a gentleman in his pleaſures. Don't you know, my good friend, that love has no reſpect for perſons, but ſoars above all laws of honour and of friendſhip? No reflection; have her I muſt, and that quickly too, or ſhe will diſcover all. Beſides, this is my wife's fault: why does not ſhe make home agreeable? I am willing to be happy; I could be conſtant to her, but ſhe is not formed for happineſs. What the devil is madam Fortune about now?—(Sir Brilliant ſings within) Sir Brilliant, by all that's infamous. Confuſion! no place to hide me? no eſcape? The door is locked. Mignionet, Mignionet, open the door.

MIGNIONET. (within)

You muſt not come in here.

LOVEMORE.

What ſhall I do? This ſtar, and this ribbon will bring me to diſgrace. Away with this tell-tale evidence. (Takes off the ribbon) Go, thou bluſhing devil, and hide thyſelf for ever. (Puts it in his pocket)

Enter SIR BRILLIANT, ſinging.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Mrs. Bellmour, I have ſuch a ſtory for you.---How!---Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

Your ſlave, Sir Brilliant, your ſlave. (hiding the ſtar with his hat)

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

I did not think you had been acquainted here.

LOVEMORE.

You are right. I came in queſt of you. I ſaw the lady. I was drawn hither by mere curioſity. We have had ſome converſation; and I made it ſubſervient to your purpoſes. I have been giving a great character of you.

SIR BRILLIANT.

You are allways at the ſervice of your friends. But what's the matter? what are you fumbling about? (pulls the hat)

LOVEMORE.

'Sdeath! have care: don't touch me. (puts his handkerchief to his breaſt)

SIR BRILLIANT.

What the devil ails you?

LOVEMORE.

Oh! keep off—(aſide) Here's a buſineſs.—Taken in the old way: let me paſs.—I have had a fling at Lord Etheridge: he will be out of favour with the widow: I have done you that good.—Racks and torments, my old complaint! (wanting to paſs him)

SIR BRILLIANT.

What complaint? You had better ſit down.

LOVEMORE.

No, no; air, the air. I muſt have a ſurgeon. A ſtroke of a tennis ball! My Lord Rackett's unlucky left hand. Let me paſs. There is ſomething forming here. (paſſes him) To be caught is the devil. (aſide)—Don't mention my name. You will counteract all I have ſaid.——Oh! torture, torture!——I will explain to you another time. Sir Brilliant, your's. I have ſerved your intereſt.—— Oh! there is certainly ſomething forming. [Exit.

SIR BRILLIANT.

What does all this mean?—So, ſo, Mrs. Lovemore's ſuſpicions are well founded.—The widow has her private viſits, I ſee. Yes, yes, there is ſomething forming here.

Enter Mrs. BELLMOUR.

SIR BRILLIANT.

So; here ſhe comes. The whole ſhall be explained. I hope, ma'am, that I don't interrupt you with any piquet-friend.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

You are allways a torment: what brings you hither?

SIR BRILLIANT.

There are times, ma'am, when a viſit——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Is unſeaſonable, and your's is ſo now. How can you teaze me?

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

I thought as much.—There are ſome things that may require to be diſcuſſed between us.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Reſerve them all for another time. I can't hear you now. You muſt leave me. There is a lady taken ill in the next room.

SIR BRILLIANT.

And here has been a gentleman taken ill in this room.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

How troubleſome! you muſt begone. Do you diſpute my will and pleaſure?—Fly this moment.

SIR BRILLIANT.

But ma'am—Nay, if you inſiſt upon it——(goes)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

But, Sir!—I will be abſolute: you muſt leave me. (puts him out) There, and now I'll make ſure of the door.

Enter Mrs. LOVEMORE, leaning on MIGNIONET.

MIGNIONET.

This way, madam: here is more air in this room.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

How do you find yourſelf? Pray ſit down.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

My ſpirits were too weak. I could not ſupport it any longer. Such a ſcene of perfidy!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

You aſtoniſh me: what perfidy?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Perfidy of the blackeſt dye! I told you that you were acquainted with my huſband?

Mrs BELLMOUR.

Acquainted with your huſband! (angrily)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

A moment's patience.—Yes, madam, you are acquainted with him.—The baſe man, who went hence but now——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Sir Brilliant Faſhion?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

No; your Lord Etheridge, as he calls himſelf——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Lord Etheridge? What of him pray?

LOVEMORE.

Falſe, diſſembling man! he is my huſband, ma'am: not Lord Etheridge, but plain Mr. Lovemore; my Mr. Lovemore.

Mrs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

And has he been baſe enough to aſſume a title to enſnare me to my undoing?

MIGNIONET. (going)

Well, for certain I believe the devil's in me: I always thought him a ſly one. [Exit.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

To ſee him carrying on this dark deſign,—to ſee the man, whom I have ever eſteemed and loved,—the man whom I muſt ſtill love,—eſteem him, I fear, I never can,—to ſee him before my face, with that artful treachery! it was too much for ſenſibility like mine; I felt the ſhock too ſeverely, and I ſunk under it.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I am ready to ſink this moment with amazement. I ſaw him, for the firſt time, at old Mrs. Loveit's. She introduced him to me. The appointment was of her own making.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You know Mrs. Loveit's character, I ſuppoſe.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

The practiſed veteran!——Could I ſuſpect that a woman, in her ſtile of life, would lend herſelf to a vile ſtratagem againſt my honour? That ſhe would join in a conſpiracy againſt her own ſex?—Mr. Lovemore, ſhall never enter theſe doors again.---I am obliged to you, ma'am, for this viſit; to me a providential incident. I am ſorry for your ſhare in it. The diſcovery ſecures my peace and happineſs; to you, it is a fatal conviction, a proof unanſwerable againſt the perſon to whom you are joined for life.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

After this diſcovery, it cannot be for life. I am reſolved not to paſs another day under his roof.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Hold, hold; no ſudden reſolutions. Conſider a little: paſſion is a bad adviſer. This may take a turn to your advantage.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

That can never be: I am loſt beyond redemption.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Don't decide too raſhly. Come, come, the man, who has certain qualities, is worth thinking about, before one throws the hideous thing away for ever. Mr. Lovemore is a traitor; but is not he ſtill amiable? And beſides, you have heard his ſentiments: That ſong points at ſomething. Perhaps you are a little to blame. He did not write upon ſuch a ſubject, without a cauſe to ſuggeſt it. We will talk over this matter cooly. You have ſaved me, and I muſt return the obligation. You ſhall ſtay dinner with me.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Excuſe me. Mr. Lovemore may poſſibly go home. He ſhall hear of his guilt, while the ſenſe of it pierces here, and wounds me to the quick.

Mrs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Now there you are wrong: take my advice firſt. I will lay ſuch a plan, as may enſure him your's for ever. Come, come, you muſt not leave me yet. (takes her hand) Anſwer me one queſtion: don't you ſtill think he has qualities, that do in ſome ſort apologize for his vices?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I don't know what to think of it: I hope he has.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Very well then. I have loſt a lover; you may gain one. Your conduct upon this occaſion may reform him; and let me tell you that the man, who has it in his power to atone for his faults, ſhould not be entirely deſpiſed.——Let the wife exert herſelf; let her try her powers of pleaſing, and take my word for it,

The wild gallant no more abroad will roam,
But find his lov'd variety at home.

End of the THIRD ACT.

ACT

ACT the FOURTH.

Scene, an Apartment in LOVEMORE'S Houſe.

Mr. and Mrs. LOVEMORE, at table, after dinner; Servants taking things out of the room.

LOVEMORE. (filling a glaſs)

I Wonder you are not tired of the ſame eternal topick. (ſipping his wine)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

If I make it an eternal topick, it is for your own good, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

I know I have your good wiſhes, and you have mine. All our abſent friends, Mrs. Lovemore. (drinks)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

If you would but wiſh well to yourſelf, Sir, I ſhould be happy.—But in the way you go on, your health muſt be ruined; day is night, and night day; your ſubſtance ſquandered; your conſtitution deſtroyed; and your family quite neglected.

LOVEMORE.

Family neglected! you ſee I dined at home, and this is my reward for it.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You dined at home, Sir, becauſe ſomething abroad has diſconcerted you. You went, I ſuppoſe, after I ſaw you at Lady Conſtant's, to your old haunt, your friend Mrs. Loveit——

LOVEMORE.

Mrs. Loveit! ha! ha! I dropt her acquaintance long ago. No, my love, I drove into the city, and ſpent the reſt of the morning upon buſineſs. I had long accounts to ſettle with old Diſcount the banker.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And that to be ſure engroſſed all your time. Buſineſs muſt be minded. Did you find him at home?

LOVEMORE.

It was by his own appointment. I went to his houſe directly after I parted from you. I have been no where elſe. Matters of account always fatigue me.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I would not be too inquiſitive, Sir.

LOVEMORE.

Oh! no; you never are. I ſtaid at the banker's the reſt of the time; and I came ſtraight from his houſe to have the pleaſure of dining with you.

(fills a glaſs of wine)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Were there any ſincerity in that declaration, I ſhould ſhould be happy. A tavern life has hitherto been your delight. I wonder what delight you can find in ſuch an eternal round of gaming, riot and diſſipation. Will you anſwer me one queſtion?

LOVEMORE.

With great pleaſure,—(aſide) if it is not inconvenient.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Lay your hand on your heart, and tell me,—— Have I deſerved this uſage?

LOVEMORE.

My humble ſervice to you, my love. (drinks)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I am ſure I have never been deficient in any one point of the duty I owe you. You won my heart, and I gave it freely.

LOVEMORE. (going to ſleep)

It is very true.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Your intereſt has been mine. I have known no pleaſure unconnected with your happineſs. Diverſions, ſhew, and pomp, have had no allurements for me.

LOVEMORE. (dropping aſleep)

Yes,—you are right—juſt as you pleaſe——

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Had I been inclined to follow the example of other women, your fortune would have felt it before now. You might have been thouſands out of pocket; but your intereſt has been the object of my attention; and your convenience——

LOVEMORE. (turns his chair from her)

You reaſon very——you reaſon admir—ably—— admi—rably——allways——all—allways——gay ——and——enter—entertaining——(going to ſleep)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Marriage is generally conſidered as an introduction to the great ſcene of the world. I thought it a retreat to leſs noiſy and ſerener pleaſures. What is called polite company (he falls faſt aſleep) was not my taſte. You was laviſh in expence; I was therefore an œconomiſt. From the moment marriage made me your's, the pleaſure ariſing from your company——There! faſt aſleep! Agreeable company indeed!——This is ever his way. (ſhe riſes) Unfeeling man!——It is too plain that I am grown his averſion. Mr. Lovemore! (looking at him) you little think what a ſcene this day has brought to light. And yet he hopes with falſehood to varniſh and diſguiſe his treachery. How mean the ſubterfuge! Shall I rouze him now, and tax him with his guilt? My heart is too full, and reproach will only tend to exaſperate, and perhaps make him irreconcileable. The pride, that can ſtoop to low and wretched artifice, but ill can brook detection. Let him reſt for the preſent. The widow Bellmour's experiment periment may anſwer better.---I will try it at leaſt. -- Oh! Mr. Lovemore, you will break my heart.

[Looks at him, and Exit.

LOVEMORE. (talking in his ſleep)

I do liſten---I am not aſleep. (ſleeps and nods) You are very right;---always right---I am only thinking a little. No---no---no---(mutters indiſtinctly) It was not two o'clock---in bed---in bed by twelve——Sir Baſhfull is an oaf---The widow Bellmour---(ſleeps, and his head rolls about) What's the matter? (waking) I beg your pardon; I was beginning to nod. What did you ſay, my dear? (leans on the table, without looking about) One cannot always you know---(turns about) 'Sdeath! ſhe is gone! Oh! faſt aſleep. This is ever the way, when one dines at home. Let me ſhake it off. (riſes) What's o'clock?---No amuſement in this houſe; what ſhall I do? The Widow?---I muſt not venture in that quarter. My evil genius Sir Brilliant will be buſy there. Is any body in the way? I muſt ſally out. My dear Venus, favour your votary this afternoon:

——— Your beſt arms employ,
All wing'd with pleaſure, and all tipt with joy.

[Exit.

Scene changes to SIR BASHFULL'S.

Enter LADY CONSTANT and FURNISH.

LADY CONSTANT.

Who brought this letter?

FUR-

FURNISH.

A ſervant of Mrs. Lovemore's: he waits an anſwer.

LADY CONSTANT.

My compliments to Mrs. Lovemore, and I ſhall wait upon her.

FURNISH.

Yes, Ma'am. (going)

LADY CONSTANT.

And hark ye, Furniſh;---have the things been carried to Sir Brilliant, as I ordered?

FURNISH.

I have obeyed your Ladyſhip's commands. The ſteward went himſelf. Mr. Pounce, your Ladyſhip knows, is a truſty body. You may depend upon his care.

LADY CONSTANT.

Go and ſend Mrs. Lovemore her anſwer. She may depend upon my being with her in time.

[Exit Furniſh.

LADY CONSTANT, alone.

What can Mrs. Lovemore want? (reads) "Ladyſhip's company to a card-party: but cards are the leaſt part of my object. I have ſomething of higher moment in view, and the preſence of my friends is abſolutely neceſſary." There is ſome myſtery in all this. What does ſhe mean? I ſhall go, and then the ſcene will clear up: Thoſe diamond buckles emembarraſs me more than Mrs. Lovemore's unintelligible letter. Diamond buckles to me! From what quarter? Who could ſend them? Nobody but Sir Brilliant. I am right in my concluſion: they came from him. Who could take the liberty but a perſon of his caſt? A preſuming man! But I have mortified his vanity. Before this time, he has found his diamonds thrown back upon his hands, with the diſdain which ſuch confidence deſerves.---But if I have made a miſtake!---Oh! no; no danger. Has not Sir Brilliant made overtures to me? Has not he declared himſelf? He ſees Sir Baſhfull's behaviour, and his vanity plumes itſelf upon that circumſtance. To give me my revenge againſt a crazy and inſufferable huſband, he would fain induce me to ruin myſelf with a coxcomb. Beſides; he heard the whole of Sir Baſhfull's diſpute about diamonds and trinkets: the thing is clear; it was Sir Brilliant ſent them; and by that ſtratagem he hopes to bribe me into compliance.---That bait will never take; though here comes one, who, I am ſure, deſerves to be treated without a grain of ceremony.

Enter SIR BASHFULL.

SIR BASHFULL.

Here ſhe is. Now let me ſee whether ſhe will take any notice of the preſent I ſent her. She has reaſon to be in good humour, I think.---Your ſervant, Madam.

LADY CONSTANT.

Your addreſs is polite, Sir.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

Still proud and obſtinate!---Has any thing happened to diſturb the harmony of your temper?

LADY CONSTANT.

Conſidering what little diſcord you make, it is a wonder that my temper is not always in tune.

SIR BASHFULL.

If you never gave me cauſe, Madam——

LADY CONSTANT.

Oh! for mercy ſake, truce with altercation. I am tired out with the eternal violence of your temper. Thoſe frequent ſtarts of paſſion hurry me out of my ſenſes: and thoſe unaccountable whims, that hold ſuch conſtant poſſeſſion of you——

SIR BASHFULL.

Whims, Madam?---Not to comply with you in every thing is a whim, truly. Muſt I yield to the exorbitant demands of your extravagance? When you laid cloſe ſiege to me for diamond bawbles, and I know not what, was that a whim of mine? Did I take that fancy into my head, without cauſe, and without ſufficient foundation?

LADY CONSTANT.

Well, we have exhauſted the ſubject. Have not you told me a thouſand times that there is no living with me? I agree to it. And have not I returned the compliment? We have nothing new to ſay; and now, all that remains, is to let the lawyer reduce to writing our mutual opinions, and ſo we may part with the pleaſure of giving each other a moſt woefull character.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

The buckles have had no effect. Stubborn! ſhe has received them, and won't own it.

LADY CONSTANT.

A daſh of your pen, Sir, at the foot of certain articles now preparing, will make us both eaſy. (going).

SIR BASHFULL.

If we don't live happily, it is your own fault.

LADY CONSTANT.

That is very old.

SIR BASHFULL.

If you would controul your paſſion for play ——

LADY CONSTANT.

Quite threadbare!

SIR BASHFULL.

I have ſtill a regard for you.

LADY CONSTANT.

Worn-out to frippery!---I can't hear any more. The law will dreſs it up in new language for us, and that will end our differences.

[Exit.

SIR BASHFULL. (alone)

I muſt unburthen my heart: there is no time to be be loſt. I love her; I admire her; ſhe inflames my tendereſt paſſions, and raiſes ſuch a conflict here in my very heart, I cannot any longer conceal the ſecret from her. I'll go and tell her all this moment. ---But then that meddling fiend, her maid, will be there: Po! I can turn her out of the room: but then the jade will ſuſpect ſomething.---Her Ladyſhip may be alone: I'll ſend to know where ſhe is. Who is there? Sideboard——

Enter SIDEBOARD.

SIR BASHFULL.

Go and tell your lady that——(pauſes)

SIDEBOARD.

Did your Honour want me?

SIR BASHFULL.

No matter; it does not ſignify.—(aſide) I ſhall never be able to tell her my mind: a glance of her eye, and my own confuſion will undo all.

SIDEBOARD.

I thought your Honour called.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

A thought comes acroſs me: I'll write her a letter. Yes, yes, a letter will do the buſineſs. Sideboard, draw that table this way—Reach me a chair.

SIDEBOARD.

There your Honour.

SIR BASHFULL.

Do you ſtay while I write a letter. You ſhall carry it for me. (ſits down to write.)

SIDEBOARD.

Yes, Sir. I hope he has an intrigue upon his hands. A ſervant thrives under a maſter that has his private amuſements. Love on, ſay I, if you are ſo given: it will bring griſt to my mill.

SIR BASHFULL. (writing)

This will ſurpriſe her. Warm, paſſionate, and tender! and yet it does not come up to what I feel.

SIDEBOARD.

What is he at?---I may as well read the news-paper. (takes it out of his pocket) What in the name of wonder is all this?---Ha! ha! (burſts into a loud laugh) I never heard the like of this before. Oh! ho! ho! ho!

SIR BASHFULL.

What does the ſcoundrel mean? (ſtares at him)

SIDEBOARD.

Ha! ha! ha! I can't help laughing.

SIR BASHFULL.

Does the villain ſuſpect me? (riſes) Hark ye, ſirrah, if ever I find that you dare liſten at any door in my houſe——

SIDEBOARD.

Sir!

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Confeſs the truth: have not you been liſtening to my converſation with Mr. Lovemore this morning?

SIDEBOARD.

Who I, Sir? I would not be guilty of ſuch a thing: I never did the like in all my days.

SIR BASHFULL.

What was you laughing at?

SIDEBOARD.

A fooliſh thing in the newſpaper, Sir, that's all. I'll read it to your Honour. (reads) We hear that a new comedy is now in rehearſal, and will ſpeedily be performed, intitled, The Amorous Huſband, or the Man in Love with his own Wife.

SIR BASHFULL.

And what do you ſee to laugh at?

SIDEBOARD.

See, Sir? I have lived in a great many families, and never heard of the like before.

SIR BASHFULL. (aſide)

There, there, there!—I ſhall be the butt of my own ſervants.—Sirrah, leave the room. And let me never hear that you have the trick of liſtening in my houſe.

SIDEBOARD.

No, Sir.—The Man in Love with his own Wife! [Exit laughing.

SIR BASHFULL.

What does the varlet mean?—No matter—I have finiſhed my letter, and it ſhall be ſent this moment. ——But then, if I ſhould get into a comedy? Po! no more ſcruples. I'll ſeal it directly—Sideboard—

Enter SIDEBOARD.

SIR BASHFULL, (ſealing the letter)

I have opened my heart to her. What do you bring your hat and ſtick for?

SIDEBOARD.

To go out with your Honour's letter.

SIR BASHFULL.

You have not far to go. Take this, and let nobody ſee you.

SIDEBOARD.

I warrant me, your Honour, [Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

I feel much lighter now. A load is taken off my heart.

Enter SIDEBOARD,

SIR BASHFULL.

What do you come back for?

SIDEBOARD.

A word or two by way of direction, if you pleaſe.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Blockhead! give it to me—(aſide) If I direct it, he finds me out.—Go about your buſineſs: I have no occaſion for you; leave the room.

SIDEBOARD.

Very well, Sir.—Does he think to manage his own intrigues? If he takes my commiſſion out of my hands, I ſhall give him warning. The vices of our maſters are all the vails a poor ſervant has left.

[Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

What muſt be done?—Mr. Lovemore could conduct this buſineſs for me. He is a man of addreſs, and knows all the approaches to a woman's heart. That fellow, Sideboard, coming again?—No, no; this is lucky. Mr. Lovemore, I am glad to ſee you.

Enter LOVEMORE.

LOVEMORE.

A ſecond viſit you ſee, in one day; entirely on the ſcore of friendſhip.

SIR BASHFULL.

And I thank you for it; heartily thank you.

LOVEMORE.

I broke away from company at the St. Alban's on purpoſe to attend you. Well, I have made your Lady eaſier in her mind, have not I?

SIR BASHFULL.

We don't hit it at all, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

No?

SIR BASHFULL.

I think ſhe has been rather worſe, ſince you ſpoke to her.

LOVEMORE.

A good ſymptom that. (aſide)

SIR BASHFULL.

She has received the diamond buckles. They were delivered to her maid ſealed up, and the man never ſtaid to be aſked a queſtion. I ſaw them in her own hand: but not a ſyllable eſcaped her. She was not in the leaſt ſoftened, obſtinate as a mule!

LOVEMORE.

The manner of conveying your preſent was not well judged. Why did not you make me the bearer?

SIR BASHFULL.

I wiſh I had. She talks of parting; and ſo to avoid coming to extremities, I have even thought of telling her the whole truth at once.

LOVEMORE.

How! acquaint her with your paſſion?

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay, and truſt to her honour. I could not venture to ſpeak; I ſhould bluſh, and faulter, and look ſilly; and ſo I have writ a letter to her. Here it is ſigned and ſealed, but not directed. I got into a puzzle about that. Servants, you know, are always putting their own conſtruction upon things.

LOVEMORE.

No doubt: and then your ſecret flies all over the town.

SIR BASHFULL.

That's what alarmed me. You ſhall write the ſuperſcription, and ſend it to her.

LOVEMORE.

No, that won't do. Give her a letter under your hand? I'll ſpeak to her for you: let me try how her pulſe beats.

SIR BASHFULL.

But a letter may draw an anſwer from her, and then, you know, (ſmiling at him) I ſhall have it under her hand.

LOVEMORE.

I don't like this hurry: we had better take time to conſider of it.

SIR BASHFULL.

No, I can't defer the buſineſs of my heart a ſingle moment. It burns like a fever here. Sit down, and write the direction; I'll ſtep and ſend the ſervant.

vant. He ſhall carry it, as if it were a letter from yourſelf.

Enter SIDEBOARD.

SIDEBOARD.

Sir Brilliant Faſhion is below, Sir.

LOVEMORE.

What brings him? He will only interrupt us. Go and talk to him, Sir Baſhfull; hear what he has to ſay; amuſe him; any thing rather than let him come up.

SIR BASHFULL.

I am gone: he ſhan't moleſt you.

[Exit with Sideboard.

LOVEMORE.

Fly, make haſte; and don't let him know that I am here.—A lucky accident this; I have gained time by it. All matters were in a right train, and he himſelf levelling the road for me, and now this letter blows me up into the air at once. Some unlucky planet rules to-day. Firſt the widow Bellmour; a hair-breadth ſcrape I had of it, and now almoſt ruined here! What in the name of wonder has he writ to her?—Friendſhip and wafer, by your leave.—But will that be delicate?—Po! honour has always a great deal to preach upon theſe occaſions; but then the buſineſs of my love!—Very true; the paſſions need but ſay a word, and their buſineſs is done. (opens the letter, and reads) This muſt never reach her. I'll write a letter from myſelf. (ſits down, writes, and ſtarts up) I hear him coming: no; all all ſafe. (writes) This will do:—vaſtly well. Her huſband's inhumanity! Ay, mention that.—The diamonds may be a preſent from me: yes, I'll venture it—There, there; that will do—Long adored—Ay—ſweeteſt revenge.——Ay—Eternal admirer—Lovemore.——Now, now, let me ſee it.—Admirable! this will do the buſineſs. (ſeals the letter)

Enter SIR BASHFULL.

SIR BASHFULL.

Well, have you ſent it?

LOVEMORE.

Not yet: I am writing the direction.

SIR BASHFULL.

And where is that blockhead?——Sideboard!

Enter SIDEBOARD.

SIR BASHFULL.

Numſkull, why don't you wait?—Mr. Lovemore wants you.

LOVEMORE.

Step and deliver this to your Lady, and if ſhe pleaſes I will wait upon her.

SIR BASHFULL.

Charming!——Take it up ſtairs directly.

SIDEBOARD.

Up ſtairs, Sir? My Lady is in the next room.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Take it to her; make haſte; begone. (Exit Sideboard) I hope this will ſucceed: I ſhall be for ever obliged to you, and ſo will her Ladyſhip.

LOVEMORE.

I hope ſhe will, and I ſhall be proud to ſerve her.

SIR BASHFULL.

You are very good. She won't prove ungratefull, I dare anſwer for her.—I ſhould like to ſee how ſhe receives the letter.---The door is conveniently open.---I will have a peep. Ay, there; there ſhe ſits.

LOVEMORE.

Where, Sir Baſhfull?

SIR BASHFULL.

Huſh, no noiſe.——There, do you ſee her? She has the letter in her hand——This is a critical moment: I am all over in a tremble.

LOVEMORE.

Silence; not a word. She opens it.---(aſide) Now, my dear Cupid, befriend me now, and your altar ſhall ſmoke with incenſe.

SIR BASHFULL.

She colours!

LOVEMORE.

I like that riſing bluſh: a ſoft and tender token.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

She turns pale.-

LOVEMORE.

The natural working of the paſſions.

SIR BASHFULL.

And now ſhe reddens again!---What is ſhe at now?---There, ſhe has tore the letter in two:---I am a loſt, an undone man. (walks away)

LOVEMORE.

She has flung it away with indignation: I am un-undone too. (aſide, and walks away from the door)

SIR BASHFULL.

Mr. Lovemore, you ſee what it is all come to.

LOVEMORE.

I am ſorry to ſee ſo haughty a ſpirit.

SIR BASHFULL.

An arrogant, ungrateful woman! to make ſuch a return to ſo kind a letter!

LOVEMORE.

Ay, ſo kind a letter!

SIR BASHFULL.

Did you ever ſee ſuch an inſolent ſcorn?

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

I never was ſo diſappointed in all my life.

SIR BASHFULL.

A letter full of the tendereſt proteſtations!

LOVEMORE.

Yes; an unreſerved declaration of love!

SIR BASHFULL.

Made with the greateſt frankneſs; throwing myſelf at her very feet!

LOVEMORE.

Did ſhe once ſmile? Was there the fainteſt gleam of approbation in her countenance?

SIR BASHFULL.

She repaid it all with ſcorn, with pride, contempt, and inſolence. I cannot bear this; deſpiſed, ſpurned, and treated like a puppy.

LOVEMORE.

There it ſtings——like a puppy indeed!

SIR BASHFULL.

Is there a thing in nature ſo mortifying to the pride of man, as to find oneſelf rejected and deſpiſed by a fine woman, who is conſcious of her power, and triumphs in her cruelty?

LOVEMORE.

It is the moſt damnable circumſtance!——

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

My dear Mr. Lovemore, I am obliged to you for taking this matter ſo much to heart.

LOVEMORE.

I take it more to heart than you aware of.

SIR BASHFULL.

This is mortifying; enough to make one aſhamed all the reſt of one's life.

LOVEMORE.

I did not expect this ſullen ill-humour.

SIR BASHFULL.

Did you ever know ſo obſtinate, ſo uncomplying a temper?

Enter SIR BRILLIANT.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Sir Baſhfull, I forgot to tell you——

LOVEMORE.

He again! he hunts me up and down, as the vice did the devil, with a dagger of lath, in the old comedy. (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

Hey!---what's the matter?---You ſeem both out of humour: what does this mean? Have you quarrelled?

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

No, Sir, no quarrell:---why would my booby ſervants let him in again? (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

Strike me ſtupid, but you look very queer upon it.---Lovemore is borrowing money, I ſuppoſe: Sir Baſhfull is driving a hard bargain, and you can't agree about the premium. Sir Baſhfull, let my friend Lovemore have the money?

SIR BASHFULL.

Money!——what does he mean?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Both out of humour, I ſee: well, as you will. You have no reaſon to be in harmony with yourſelves; my ſtars ſhine with a kinder aſpect. Here, here, behold a treaſury of love. I came back on purpoſe to ſhew it to you. (takes a ſhagreen caſe out of his pocket) See what a preſent I have received; a magnificent pair of diamond buckles, by all that's amiable.

LOVEMORE.

How?

SIR BASHFULL. (walking up to him)

A pair of diamond buckles!

SIR BRILLIANT.

How ſuch a preſent ſhould be ſent to me is more than I can explain at preſent. Perhaps my friend Love-

Lovemore gained ſome intelligence in the quarter where I ſurprized him to-day, on a viſit which I little ſuſpected.

LOVEMORE.

That was to ſerve you: I know nothing of this buſineſs.

SIR BRILLIANT.

The pain in your ſide, I hope, is better.

LOVEMORE.

Po! this is only to diſtract your attention, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

So I ſuppoſe. And was this a preſent to you?

SIR BRILLIANT.

A preſent, Sir. The conſequence of having ſome tolerable phraſe, a perſon, and a due degree of attention to the ſervice of the ladies.—Do you envy me, Sir Baſhfull?

SIR BASHFULL.

I can't but ſay I do.—(turns to Lovemore) My buckles, by all that's falſe in woman!

LOVEMORE.

Take no notice.—(walks aſide) Has he ſupplanted me here too, as well as with the widow?

SIR BRILLIANT.

What's the matter with you both?—Burning with envy!

SIR BASHFULL.

And I ſuppoſe an elegant epiſtle, or a well-penned billet-doux, accompanied this token of the lady's affection.

SIR BRILLIANT.

That would have been an agreeable addition, but it is ſtill to come. Too many favours at once might overwhelm a body. A country-looking fellow, as my people tell me, left this, curiouſly ſealed up, at my houſe: he would not ſay from whence he came: I ſhould know that in time, was all they could get from him, and I am now panting to learn where this mighty ſucceſs has attended me. Sir Baſhfull, I came, ſaw, and conquered; ha! ha! ha!

SIR BASHFULL.

But may not this be from ſome lady, who imagines that you ſent it, and therefore chuſes to reject your preſent?

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh! no; that cannot be the caſe. A little knowledge of the world would ſoon convince you that ladies do not uſually reject preſents from the man, who has the good fortune to pleaſe by his manner, a taſte for dreſs, and a certain je ne ſçai quoi in his perſon and converſation.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

So I believe.—(walks aſide) What ſay you to this, Mr. Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

She would not have torn a letter from him.

SIR BRILLIANT.

No, Sir Baſhfull; a preſent from me would not have been returned back upon my hands.

SIR BASHFULL.

I dare ſay not.—(to Lovemore) I ſuppoſe ſhe will give him my three hundred pounds into the bargain.

LOVEMORE.

After this, I ſhall wonder at nothing.

SIR BRILLIANT.

What mortified countenances they both put on! (looks at them, and laughs)

SIR BASHFULL. (walking up to Sir Brilliant)

And I ſuppoſe you expect to have this lady?

SIR BRILLIANT.

No doubt of it. This is the forerunner, I think. Hey, Lovemore!—Sir Baſhfull, this it is to be in luck. Ha! ha! (laughs at them both)

LOVEMORE and SIR BASHFULL.

(both forcing a laugh)

Ha! ha!

SIR BRILLIANT.

You both ſeem ſtrangely picqued.—Lovemore, what makes you ſo uneaſy?

LOVEMORE.

You flatter yourſelf, and you wrong me—I—I— (walks away)

SIR BASHFULL.

He is a true friend: he is uneaſy on my account. (aſide, and looking at Lovemore)

SIR BRILLIANT.

And Sir Baſhfull, ſomething has daſhed your ſpirits. Do you repine at my ſucceſs?

SIR BASHFULL.

I can't but ſay I do, Sir.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Oh! very well; you are not diſpoſed to be good company. A l'honneur, gentlemen: finiſh your money matters. Lovemore, where do you ſpend the evening?

LOVEMORE.

A good evening to you, Sir Brilliant: I am engaged. Buſineſs with Sir Baſhfull, you ſee——

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

Well, don't let me be of inconvenience to you. Fare ye well, gentlemen. Thou dear pledge of love (looking at the buckles) thus let me claſp thee to my heart.——Sir Baſhfull, your ſervant.

[Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

What think you now, Mr. Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

All unaccountable, Sir.

SIR BASHFULL.

By all that's falſe, I am gulled, cheated, and impoſed upon. I am deceived, and dubbed a rank cuckold. It is too clear; ſhe has given him the buckles, and I ſuppoſe my bank-notes have taken the ſame courſe.——Diamond buckles, and three hundred pounds for Sir Brilliant! A reward for his merit!

LOVEMORE.

He is the favourite, and I have been working for him all this time.

SIR BASHFULL.

I now ſee through all her artifices. My reſolution is fixed. If I can but get ocular demonſtration of her guilt; If I can but get the means of proving to the whole world that ſhe is vile enough to cuckold me, I ſhall then be happy.

LOVEMORE.

Why that will be ſome conſolation!

SIR BASHFULL.

So it will: kind Heaven, grant me that at leaſt; make it plain that ſhe diſhonours me, and I am amply revenged.—Hark! I hear her coming. She ſhall know all I think, and all I feel. I have done with her for ever.

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

Let me fly the impending ſtorm. If I ſtay, detection and diſgrace purſue me.——Sir Baſhfull, I am ſorry to ſee matters take this turn. I have done all in my power, and ſince there is no room to hope for ſucceſs, I take my leave, and wiſh you a good night.

SIR BASHFULL.

No, no; you ſhall not leave me in this diſtreſs. You ſhall hear me tell her her own, and be a witneſs of our ſeparation. (holding him)

LOVEMORE.

Excuſe me: after what has paſſed, I ſhall never be able to endure the ſight of her. Fare you well; I muſt be gone; good night, Sir Baſhfull.

(ſtruggling to go)

SIR BASHFULL.

You are my beſt friend: I cannot part with you. (ſtands between him and the door) Stay and hear what ſhe ſhe has to ſay for herſelf; you will ſee what a turn ſhe will give to the buſineſs.

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

What turn ſhall I give it?——Confuſion! here ſhe comes: I muſt weather the ſtorm.

Enter LADY CONSTANT.

LADY CONSTANT.

After this behaviour, Mr. Lovemore, I am ſurprized, Sir, that you can think of ſtaying a moment longer in this houſe.

LOVEMORE,

Madam, I——'ſdeath! I have no invention to aſſiſt me at a pinch. (aſide)

SIR BASHFULL.

Mr. Lovemore is my friend, Madam, and I deſire he will ſtay in my houſe as long as he pleaſes.—Hey, Lovemore! (looks at him and ſmiles)

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

All muſt out, I fear.

LADY CONSTANT.

Your friend, Sir Baſhfull!—And do you authorize him to take this unbecoming liberty? Have you given him permiſſion to ſend me a letter, ſo extravagant in the very terms of it?

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

Ay, now it's coming, and impudence itſelf has not a word to ſay.

SIR BASHFULL.

I deſired him to ſend that letter, Madam.

LOVEMORE.

Sir Baſhfull deſired me, Ma'am.

(bowing reſpectfully)

SIR BASHFULL.

I deſired him.

LOVEMORE.

All at his requeſt, Ma'am.

LADY CONSTANT.

And am I to be made your ſport?—I wonder, Mr. Lovemore, that you would condeſcend to make yourſelf a party in ſo poor a plot. Do you preſume upon a trifling mark of civility, which you perſuaded me to accept of this morning? Do you come diſguiſed under a maſk of friendſhip, to help this gentleman in his deſign againſt my honour, and my happineſs?

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

Fairly caught, and nothing can bring me off—

SIR BASHFULL.

A maſk of friendſhip!—He is a true friend, Madam; he ſees how ill I am treated, and let me tell you, there is not a word of truth in that letter.

LOVEMORE.

Not a ſyllable of truth, Ma'am—(aſide) This will do: his own nonſenſe will ſave me.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

It was all done to try you, Madam.

LOVEMORE.

Nothing more, Ma'am: merely to try you.

SIR BASHFULL.

By way of experiment only; juſt to ſee how you would behave upon it.

LOVEMORE.

Nothing elſe was intended; pure innocent mirth.

LADY CONSTANT.

You have been both notably employed. The exploit is worthy of you. Your ſnare is ſpread for a woman, and if you had ſucceeded, the fame of ſo bright an action would add mightily to two ſuch illuſtrious characters.

SIR BASHFULL.

A ſnare ſpread for her! mark that Mr. Lovemore: ſhe calls it enſnaring.

LOVEMORE.

Enſnared to her own good. (To Sir Baſhfull)— He has pleaded admirably for me. (aſide)

LADY CONSTANT.

As to you, Sir Baſhfull, I have long ago ceaſed to wonder at your conduct: you have loſt the power of ſurprizing me; but when Mr. Lovemore becomes an accomplice in ſo mean a plot—

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

I am in no plot, madam, and no body wants to enſnare you: do we, Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

Sir Baſhfull knows that no harm was intended.

SIR BASHFULL.

Yes, I am in the ſecret, and my friend Lovemore meant no harm.

LOVEMORE.

If the letter had ſucceeded, Sir Baſhfull knows there would have been no harm in it.

SIR BASHFULL.

No harm in nature; but I now ſee how things are; and ſince your ladyſhip will liſten to nothing for your own good, it is too plain from all that has paſſed between us, that our tempers are by no means fitted for each other, and I am ready to part whenever you pleaſe: nay, I will part.

LADY CONSTANT.

And that is the only point, in which we can agree, Sir.

SIR BASHFULL.

Had the letter been ſent from another quarter, it would have have met with a better reception; we know where your ſmiles are beſtowed.

LADY

LADY CONSTANT.

Deal in calumny, Sir; give free ſcope to malice; I diſdain your inſinuations.

SIR BASHFULL.

The fact is too clear, and reproaches are now too late. This is the laſt of our converſing together; and you may take this by the way, you are not to believe one ſyllable of that letter.

LOVEMORE.

There is not a ſyllable of it deſerves the leaſt credit, Ma'am.

SIR BASHFULL.

It was all a mere joke, Madam: was not it, Lovemore?—And as to your being a fine woman, and as to any paſſion that any body has conceived for you, there was no ſuch thing; you can witneſs for me, Lovemore: can't you?

LADY CONSTANT.

Oh! you are witneſſes for one another.

LOVEMORE.

Sir Baſhfull knows the fairneſs of my intentions, and I know his.—(aſide) He has acquitted me better than I expected, thanks to his abſurdity.

LADY CONSTANT.

Go on, and aggravate your ill uſage, gentlemen.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

It was all a bam, madam, a ſcene we thought proper to act. Let us laugh at her. (goes up to Lovemore)

LOVEMORE.

With all my heart—(aſide) A ſilly blockhead! I can't help laughing at him. (laughing heartily)

SIR BASHFULL. (laughing with him)

Ha! ha!—ha!—all a bam; nothing elſe; a contrivance to make ſport for ourſelves.—Hey, Lovemore?

LADY CONSTANT.

This uſage is inſupportable. I ſhall not ſtay for an explanation. Two ſuch worthy confederates!—is my chair ready there? You my depend, Sir, that this is the laſt time you will ſee me in this houſe.

[Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

Agreed; a bargain; with all my heart. Lovemore I have managed this well.

LOVEMORE.

Charmingly managed! I did not think you had ſo much ſpirit.

SIR BASHFULL.

I have found her out. The intrigue is to too plain. She and Sir Brilliant are both detected.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

I never ſuſpected that Sir Brilliant was the happy man. I wiſh I had ſucceeded, had it been only to mortify his vanity.

SIR BASHFULL.

And ſo do I: I wiſh it too: but never own the letter: deny it to the laſt.

LOVEMORE.

You may depend upon my ſecrecy.

SIR BASHFULL.

I am for ever obliged to you. A fooliſh woman! how ſhe ſtands in her own light?

LOVEMORE.

Truly I think ſhe does. But ſince I have no intereſt with her ladyſhip, I ſhall now ſound a retreat, and leave matters to your own diſcreiton. Succeſs attend you. (going)

SIR BASHFULL.

You muſt not forſake me in this diſtreſs.

LOVEMORE.

Had your lady proved tractable, I ſhould not have cared how long I had ſtaid. But ſince things are come to this paſs, I ſhall now go and ſee what kind of reception I am to meet with from Mrs. Lovemore.

SIR

SIR BASHFULL.

Don't let her know that you have a regard for her.

LOVEMORE.

Oh! no; I ſee the conſequence.—(aſide) Well off this time; and Madam Fortune, if I truſt you again, you ſhall play me what prank you pleaſe. Sir Baſhfull, your's. (going)

SIR BASHFULL.

A thouſand thanks to you. And harkye, if I can ſerve you with your lady——

LOVEMORE.

I am much obliged to you: but I ſhall endeavour to go on, without giving you the trouble of aſſiſting me. And do you hear? aſſure my Lady Conſtant that I meant nothing but to ſerve your intereſt.

[Exit.

SIR BASHFULL.

Rely upon my management. I can acquit you. —My Lady Conſtant! Lady Conſtant!—Let me chaſe her from thoughts: can I do it? Rage, fury, love——no more of love! I am glad ſhe tore the letter. Odſo! yonder it lies. It is only torn in two, and ſhe may ſtill piece the fragments together. I'll pick up the letter this moment: it ſhall never appear in evidence againſt me. As to Sir Brilliant, his motions ſhall be watched: I know how to proceed with Madam, and if I can but prove the fact, every body will ſay that I am ill uſed by her.

End of the FOURTH ACT.

ACT the FIFTH.

Scene, an Apartment at Mr. LOVEMORE'S.

Enter Mrs. LOVEMORE, elegantly dreſs'd; MUSLIN following her.

MUSLIN.

WHY to be ſure, Ma'am, it is ſo for certain, and you are very much in the right of it.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I fancy I am: I ſee the folly of my former conduct. I am determined never to let my ſpirits ſink into a melancholy ſtate again.

MUSLIN.

Why, that's the very thing, Ma'am; the very thing I have been always preaching up to you. Did not I always ſay, ſee company, Ma'am, take your pleaſure, and never break your heart for any man? This is what I always ſaid.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And you have ſaid enough: ſpare yourſelf the trouble now.

MUSLIN.

I always ſaid ſo! And what did the world ſay? Heavens bleſs her for a ſweet woman! and a plague go with him for an inhuman, barbarous, bloody—murdering brute.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Well, truce with your impertinence; your tongue runs on at ſuch a rate.

MUSLIN.

Nay, don't be angry: they did ſay ſo indeed. But dear heart, how every body will be over joy'd, when they find you have pluck'd up a little! As for me, it gives me new life, to have ſo much company in the houſe, and ſuch a racketting at the door with coaches and chairs, enough to hurry a body out of one's wits. Lard, this is another thing, and you look quite like another thing, Ma'am, and that dreſs quite becomes you. I ſuppoſe, Ma'am, you will never wear your negligèe again. It is not fit for you indeed, Ma'am. It might paſs very well with ſome folks, Ma'am, but the like of you—

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Will you never have done? Go and ſee who is coming up ſtairs.

Enter Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Mrs. Bellmour, I revive at the ſight of you. Muſlin, do you ſtep, and do as I ordered you.

MUSLIN.

What the deuce can ſhe be at now? [Exit.

Mrs BELLMOUR.

You ſee I am punctual to my time.—Well I admire your dreſs of all things.—It's mighty pretty.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I am glad you like it. But under all this appearance of gaiety, I have at the bottom but an aching heart.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Be ruled by me, and I'll anſwer for the event. Why really, now you look juſt as you ſhou'd do.—Why neglect ſo fine a figure?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You are ſo obliging!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

And ſo true!——What was beautiful before, is now heightened by the additional ornaments of dreſs; and if you will but animate and inſpire the whole by thoſe graces of the mind which I am ſure you poſſeſs, the impreſſion cannot fail of being effectual upon all beholders, and even upon the depraved mind of Mr. Lovemore.—You have not ſeen him ſince—have you?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

He dined at home, but was ſoon upon the wing to his uſual haunts.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

If he does but come home time enough, depend upon it my plot will take. And have you got together a good deal of company?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Yes; a tolerable party.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

That's right: ſhew him that you will conſult your own pleaſure.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

A-propos, as ſoon as I came home I received a letter from Sir Brilliant, in a ſtile of warmth and tenderneſs that would aſtoniſh you. He begs to ſee me again, and has ſomething particular to communicate. I left it in my dreſſing-room; you ſhall ſee it by and by: I took your advice, and ſent him word he might come. That lure brought him hither immediately: he makes no doubt of his ſucceſs with me.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Well! two ſuch friends as Sir Brilliant and Mr. Lovemore, I believe, never exiſted!

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Their falſehood to each other is unparalleled. I left Sir Brilliant at the card-table: as ſoon as he can diſengage himſelf, he will quit his company in purſuit of me. I forgot to tell you; my Lady Conſtant is here.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Is ſhe?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

She is, and has been making the ſtrangeſt diſcovery: Mr. Lovemore has had a deſign there too!

Mrs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Oh! I don't doubt him: but the more proof we have the better.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

There is ſufficient proof: you muſt know, Ma'am, (a rap at the door) as I live and breathe, I believe this is Mr. Lovemore.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

If it is, every thing goes on as I could wiſh.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I hear his voice, it is he. How my heart beats!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Courage, and the day's our own. He muſt not ſee me yet: where ſhall I run?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

In there, Ma'am. Make haſte; I hear his ſtep on the ſtairs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Succeſs attend you. I am gone. [Exit.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I am frightened out of my ſenſes. What the event may be I fear to think; but I muſt go through with it.

Enter LOVEMORE.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You are welcome home, Sir.

LOVEMORE.

Mrs. Lovemore, your ſervant.
(without looking at her)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

It is ſomewhat rare to ſee you at home ſo early.

LOVEMORE.

I ſaid I ſhould come home, did not I? I always like to be as good as my word.—What could the Widow mean by this uſage? to make an appointment, and break it thus abruptly! (aſide)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

He ſeems to muſe upon it. (aſide)

LOVEMORE. (aſide)

She does not mean to do ſo treacherous a thing as to jilt me? Oh, Lord! I am wonderfully tired.
(yawns, and ſinks into an armed chair)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Are you indiſpoſed, my dear?

LOVEMORE.

No, my love; I thank you, I am very well;—a little fatigued only, with jolting over the ſtones all the way into the city this morning. I have paid a few viſits this afternoon.—Confoundedly tired.—Where's William?

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Do you want any thing?

LOVEMORE.

Only my cap and ſlippers. I am not in ſpirits, I think. (yawns)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You never are in ſpirits at home, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

I beg your pardon: I never am any where more chearful. (ſtretching his arms) I wiſh I may die if I an't very happy at home,——very (yawns) very happy!

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I can hear otherwiſe. I am informed that Mr. Lovemore is the promoter of mirth and good humour wherever he goes.

LOVEMORE.

Oh! no, you over-rate me; upon my ſoul you do.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I can hear, Sir, that no perſon's company is ſo acceptable to the ladies; that your wit inſpires every thing; you have your compliment for one, your ſmile for another, a whiſper for a third, and ſo on, Sir; you divide your favours, and are every where, but at home, all whim, vivacity, and ſpirit.

LOVEMORE.

Ho! ho! (laughing) how can you talk ſo? I ſwear I can't help laughing at the fancy. All whim, vivacity, and ſpirit! I ſhall burſt my ſides. How can you banter one ſo?——I divide my favours too! ——Oh, heavens! I can't ſtand this raillery: ſuch a deſcription of me!——I that am rather ſaturnine, of a ſerious caſt, and inclined to be penſive! I can't help laughing at the oddity of the conceit.——Oh Lord! Oh Lord! (laughs)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Juſt as you pleaſe, Sir. I ſee that I am ever to be treated with indifference.

(walks acroſs the ſtage)

LOVEMORE.

(Riſes and walks the contrary way.

I can't put this Widow Bellmour out of my head. (aſide)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

If I had done any thing to provoke this uſage, this cold, determined contempt——(walking)

LOVEMORE.

I wiſh I had done with that buſineſs entirely; but my deſires are kindled, and muſt be ſatisfied. (aſide)

(They walk for ſome time ſilently by each other.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

What part of my conduct gives you offence, Mr. Lovemore?

LOVEMORE.

Still harping upon that ungrateful ſtring!——but prithee don't ſet me a laughing again.——Offence!---nothing gives me offence, child!--you know I am very fond---(yawns and walks)---I like you of all things, and think you a moſt admirable wife;---prudent, managing,---careleſs of your own perſon, and very attentive to mine;---not much addicted to pleaſure,---grave, retired, and domeſtic; you govern your houſe; pay the tradeſmen's bills, (yawns) ſcold the ſervants, and love your huſband:---upon my ſoul, a very good wife!---As good a ſort of a wife (yawns) as a body might wiſh to have.——Where's William? I muſt go to bed.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

To bed ſo early! Had not you better join the company?

LOVEMORE.

I ſhan't go out to-night.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

But I mean the company in the dining-room.

LOVEMORE.

Company in the dining-room! (ſtares at her)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Yes: I invited them to a rout.

LOVEMORE.

A rout in my houſe!---and you dreſſed out too! ---What is all this?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You have no objection I hope.

LOVEMORE.

Objection!—no, I like company, you know, of all things; I'll go and join them: Who are they all?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You know 'em all; and there's your friend Sir Brilliant.

LOVEMORE.

Is he there? I ſhall be glad to ſee him. But pray, how comes all this about?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I intend to ſee company often.

LOVEMORE.

Do you?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Ay, and not look tamely on, while you revel luxuriouſly in a courſe of pleaſure. I ſhall purſue my own plan of diverſion.

LOVEMORE.

Do ſo, Ma'am: the change in your temper will not be diſagreeable.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

And ſo I ſhall, Sir, I aſſure ye. Adieu to melancholy, and welcome pleaſure, wit and gaiety, (ſhe walks about and ſings.)

LOVEMORE.

What the devil has come over her? And what in the name of wonder does all this mean?

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Mean, Sir!—It means, it means—how can you aſk me what it means?—Well, to be ſure, the ſobriety of that queſtion!—Do you think a woman of ſpirit can have leiſure to tell her meaning, when ſhe is all air, alertneſs, rapture and enjoyment?

LOVEMORE.

She's mad!—Stark mad!

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

You're miſtaken, Sir,—not mad, but in ſpirits, that's all. Am I too flighty for you?—Perhaps I am: you are of a ſaturnine diſpoſition, inclin'd to think a little, or ſo. Well, don't let me interrupt you; don't let me be of any inconvenience. That would be the unpoliteſt thing; a married couple to be interfering and encroaching on each other's pleaſures! Oh hideous! it would be Gothic to the laſt degree. Ha! ha! ha!

LOVEMORE. (forcing a laugh)

Ha! ha!—Ma'am, you—ha! ha! you are perfectly right.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Nay, but I don't like that laugh now: I poſitively don't like it. Can't you laugh out as you were uſed to do? For my part, I'm determined to do nothing elſe all the reſt of my life.

LOVEMORE.

This is the moſt aſtoniſhing thing! Ma'am I don't rightly comprehend——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Oh Lud! oh Lud!---with that important face! Well, but come! what don't you comprehend?

LOVEMORE.

There is ſomething in this treatment that I don't ſo well——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Oh! are you there, Sir! How quickly they, who have no ſenſibility for the peace and happineſs of others, can feel for themſelves, Mr. Lovemore!--- But that's a grave reflection, and I hate reflection.

LOVEMORE.

What has ſhe got into her head? This ſudden change, Mrs. Lovemore, let me tell you——

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Nay, don't be frighten'd: there is no harm in innocent mirth, I hope; never look ſo grave upon it. I aſſure you, Sir, that though, on your part, you ſeem deter-determined to offer conſtant indignities to your wife, and though the laws of retaliation wou'd in ſome ſort exculpate her, if, when provok'd to the utmoſt, exaſperated beyond all enduring, ſhe ſhould, in her turn, make him know what it is to receive an injury in the tendereſt point—

LOVEMORE.

Madam! (angrily)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Well, well, don't be alarmed. I ſhan't retaliate: my own honour will ſecure you there; you may depend upon it.—Will you come and play a game at cards? Well, do as you like; you won't come? No, no, I ſee you won't.—What ſay you to a bit of ſupper with us?---Nor that neither?---Follow your inclinations: it is not material where a body eats, you know; the company expects me; adieu, Mr. Lovemore, yours, yours. [Exit ſinging.

LOVEMORE.

This is a frolic I never ſaw her in before!---Laugh all the reſt of my life!--laws of retaliation!--an injury in the tendereſt point;---the company expects me, ---adieu! yours, yours!---(mimicking her.) What the devil is all this? Some of her female friends have been tampering with her. So, ſo; I muſt begin to look a little ſharp after madam. I'll go this moment into the card-room and watch whom ſhe whiſpers with, whom ſhe ogles with, and every circumſtance that can lead to---(going)

Enter

Enter MUSLIN in a hurry.

MUSLIN.

Madam, Madam,—here's your letter; I wou'd not for all the world that my maſter——

LOVEMORE.

What, is ſhe mad too? What's the matter, woman?

MUSLIN.

Nothing, Sir,---nothing: I wanted a word with my Lady, that's all, Sir.

LOVEMORE.

You wou'd not for the world that your maſter,---what was you going to ſay?---What paper's that?

MUSLIN.

Paper, Sir!

LOVEMORE.

Paper, Sir! let me ſee it.

MUSLIN.

Lord, Sir! how can you aſk a body for ſuch a thing. It's a letter to me, Sir, a letter from the country; a letter from my ſiſter, Sir. She bids me to buy her a Shiver de Fize cap, and a ſixteenth in the lottery; and tells me of a number ſhe dreamt of, that's all, Sir; I'll put it up.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Let me look at it. Give it me this moment. (reads) To Mrs. Lovemore!---Brilliant Faſhion. This is a letter from the country, is it?

MUSLIN.

That, Sir---that is---no Sir,---no;---that's not ſiſter's letter.---If you will give me that back, Sir, I'll ſhew you the right one.

LOVEMORE.

Where did you get this?

MUSLIN.

Sir?

LOVEMORE.

Where did you get it?---Tell me truth.

MUSLIN.

Dear heart, you fright a body ſo---in the parlour, Sir,---I found it there.

LOVEMORE.

Very well!---leave the room.

MUSLIN.

The devil fetch it, I was never ſo out in my politicks, in all my days. [Exit.

LOVEMORE.

A pretty epiſtle truly! (reads) "When you com-

" command me, my deareſt Mrs. Lovemore, never to " touch again upon the ſubject of my love, you " command an impoſſibility. You excite the flame, " and forbid it to burn. Permit me once more to " throw myſelf on my knees, and implore your " compaſſion."——Compaſſion with a vengeance on him!——" Think you ſee me now with tender, " melting, ſupplicating eyes, languiſhing at your " feet."——Very well, Sir!——" Can you find it " in your heart to perſiſt in cruelty?---Grant me " but acceſs to you once more, and in addition to " what I already ſaid this morning, I will urge ſuch " motives"---Urge motives, will ye?---" as will " convince you, that you ſhould no longer heſitate " in gratitude, to reward him, who here makes a " vow of eternal conſtancy and love.

" BRILLIANT FASHION."

So! ſo! ſo! your very humble ſervant, Sir Brilliant Faſhion!——This is your friendſhip for me, is it?---you are mighty kind indeed, Sir,---but I thank you as much as if you had really done me the favour: and, Mrs. Lovemore, I'm your humble ſervant too. She intends to laugh all the reſt of her life! This letter will change her note. Yonder ſhe comes along the gallery, and Sir Brilliant in full chace of her. They come this way. Could I but detect them both now! I'll ſtep aſide, and who knows but the devil may tempt them to their undoing. A polite huſband I am: there's the coaſt clear for you, madam. [Exit.

Enter Mrs. LOVEMORE and SIR BRILLIANT.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I have already told you my mind, Sir Brilliant. Your

Your civility is odious; your compliments fulſome; and your ſolicitations inſulting.——I muſt make uſe of harſh language, Sir: you provoke it.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Not retiring to ſolitude and diſcontent again, I hope, madam! Have a care, my dear Mrs. Lovemore, of a relapſe.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

No danger, Sir: don't be too ſolicitous about me. Why leave the company? Let me intreat you to return, Sir.

SIR BRILLIANT.

By Heaven, there is more rapture in being one moment vis-a-vis with you, than in the company of a whole drawing-room of beauties. Round you are melting pleaſures, tender tranſports, youthful loves, and blooming graces, all unfelt, neglected, and deſpiſed, by a taſteleſs, cold, unimpaſſioned huſband, while they might be all ſo much better employed to the purpoſes of ecſtaſy and bliſs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I am amazed, Sir, at this liberty.——What action of my life has authorized this aſſurance?——I deſire, Sir, you will deſiſt. Were I not afraid of the ill conſequences that might follow, I ſhould not heſitate a moment to acquaint Mr. Lovemore with your whole behaviour.

SIR BRILLIANT.

She won't tell her huſband!——A charming creature, and bleſſings on her for ſo convenient a hint.

She

She yields, by all my hopes!---What ſhall I ſay to overwhelm her ſenſes in a flood of nonſenſe? (aſide)

Go my heart's envoys, tender ſighs make haſte,---
Still drink delicious poiſon from thy eye,---
Raptures and paradiſe
Pant on thy lip, and to thy heart he preſs'd.

(forcing her all this time)

Enter Mr. LOVEMORE.

LOVEMORE.

Hell and diſtraction! this is too much.

SIR BRILLIANT.

What the devil's the matter now? (kneels down to buckle his ſhoe) This confounded buckle is always plaguing me. Lovemore! I rejoice to ſee thee. (looking at each other)

LOVEMORE.

And have you the confidence to look me in the face?

SIR BRILLIANT.

I was telling your lady here, of the moſt whimſical adventure——

LOVEMORE.

Don't add the meanneſs of falſehood to the black attempt of invading the happineſs of your friend. I did imagine, Sir, from the long intercourſe that has ſubſiſted between us, that you might have had delicacy enough, feeling enough, honour enough, Sir, not to meditate an injury like this.

SIR

SIR BRILLIANT.

Ay, it's all over, I am detected. (aſide) Mr. Lovemore, I feel that I have been wrong, and will not attempt a vindication of myſelf. We have been friends hitherto, and if begging your pardon for this raſhneſs will any ways atone——

LOVEMORE.

No, Sir, nothing can atone. The provocation you have given me, would juſtify my drawing upon you this inſtant, did not that lady, and this roof protect you.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Harſh language to a friend——

LOVEMORE.

Friend, Sir Brilliant?

SIR BRILLIANT.

If you will but hear me——

LOVEMORE.

Sir, I inſiſt; I won't hear a word.

SIR BRILLIANT.

I declare upon my honour——

LOVEMORE.

Honour! for ſhame, Sir Brilliant: honour and friendſhip are ſacred words, and you profane them both.

SIR BRILLIANT.

If imploring forgiveneſs of that lady——

LOVEMORE.

That lady!---I deſire you will never ſpeak to that lady.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Can you command a moment's patience?

LOVEMORE.

Sir, I am out of all patience: this muſt be ſettled between us: I have done for the preſent.

Enter SIR BASHFULL.

SIR BASHFULL.

Did not I hear loud words among you? I certainly did. What are you quarreling about?

LOVEMORE.

Read that, Sir Baſhfull. (Gives him Sir Brilliant's letter) Read that, and judge if I have not cauſe--- (Sir Baſhfull reads to himſelf.)

SIR BRILLIANT.

Hear but what I have to ſay——

LOVEMORE.

No, Sir, no; we ſhall find a fitter time: as for you, Madam, I am ſatisfied with your conduct. I was indeed a little alarmed, but I have been a witneſs of of your behaviour, and I am above harbouring low ſuſpicions.

SIR BASHFULL.

Upon my word, Mr. Lovemore, this is carrying the jeſt too far.

LOVEMORE.

It is the baſeſt action a gentleman can be guilty of; and to a perſon who never injured him, ſtill more criminal.

SIR BASHFULL.

Why ſo I think. Sir Brilliant, (to him aſide) here take this letter, and read it to him; his own letter to my wife.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Let me ſee it---(takes the letter)

SIR BASHFULL.

'Tis indeed, as you ſay, the vileſt action a gentleman can be guilty of.

LOVEMORE.

An unparallelled breach of friendſhip.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Not altogether ſo unparallelled: I believe it will not be found without a precedent---as for example ---(reads)

To My Lady Conſtant——

" Why ſhould I conceal, my dear Madam, that your charms have awaken'd my tendereſt paſſions?

LOVEMORE.

Confuſion! my letter---(aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT. (reading)

"I long have lov'd you, long adored. Could I but "flatter myſelf"---(Lovemore walks about uneaſy; Sir Brilliant follows him)

SIR BASHFULL.

There, Mr. Lovemore, the baſeſt treachery!

SIR BRILLIANT. (Reads)

"Could I but flatter myſelf with the leaſt kind return."

LOVEMORE.

Confuſion! let me ſeize the letter out of his hand. (Snatches it from him,)

SIR BASHFULL.

An unparallelled breach of friendſhip, Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

All a forgery, Sir; all a forgery.

SIR BASHFULL.

That I deny; it is the very identical letter my lady threw away with ſuch indignation. She tore it in two, and I have pieced it together.

LOVEMORE.

A mere contrivance to varniſh his guilt.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Ha! ha! my dear Lovemore, we know one another.

ther. Have not you been at the ſame work with the widow Bellmour?

LOVEMORE.

The widow Bellmour!—If I ſpoke to her, it was to ſerve you, Sir.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Are you ſure of that?

LOVEMORE.

Po! I won't ſtay a moment longer among ye. I'll go into another room, to avoid ye all. I know little or nothing of the widow Bellmour, Sir. (opens the door; Enter Mrs. Bellmour) Hell and deſtruction! —what fiend is conjured up here! Zoons! let me make my eſcape out of the houſe.

(runs to the oppoſite door)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I'll ſecure this paſs: you muſt not go, my dear.

LOVEMORE.

'Sdeath, Madam, give me way.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Nay, don't be in ſuch a hurry: I want to introduce an acquaintance of mine to you.

LOVEMORE.

I deſire, Madam——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

My Lord, my Lord Etheridge; I am heartily glad to ſee your Lordſhip (taking hold of him)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Do, my dear, let me introduce this lady to you (turning him to her)

LOVEMORE.

Here's the devil and all to do! (aſide)

Mrs BELLMOUR.

My Lord, this is the moſt fortunate encounter!

LOVEMORE.

I wiſh I was fifty miles off. (aſide)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Mrs. Bellmour, give me leave to introduce Mr. Lovemore to you (turning him to her)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

No, my dear Ma'am, let me introduce Lord Etheridge to you. (pulling him) My Lord——

SIR BRILLIANT.

In the name of wonder, what is all this?

SIR BASHFULL.

This is another of his intrigues blown up.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

My dear Ma'am you are miſtaken? This is my huſband.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Pardon me, Ma'am, 'tis my Lord Etheridge.

Mrs.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

My dear, how can you be ſo ill-bred in your own houſe?—Mrs. Bellmour,—this is Mr. Lovemore.

LOVEMORE.

Are you going to toſs me in a blanket, Madam?—call up the reſt of your people, if you are.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Pſhaw! prithee now, my Lord, leave off your humours. Mrs. Lovemore, this is my Lord Etheridge, a lover of mine, who has made propoſals of marriage to me.

LOVEMORE.

Confuſion! let me get rid of theſe two furies (breaks away from them.)

SIR BASHFULL.

He has been tampering with her too, has he?

Mrs. BELLMOUR (follows him.)

My Lord, I ſay! my Lord Etheridge! won't your Lordſhip know me?

LOVEMORE.

This is the moſt damnable accident! (aſide.)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I hope your lordſhip has not forgot your appointment at my houſe this evening.

LOVEMORE.

I deſerve all this. (aſide)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Pray, my Lord, what have I done, that you treat me with this coldneſs? Come, come, you ſhall have a wife: I will take compaſſion on you.

LOVEMORE.

Damnation! I can't ſtand it. (aſide)

SIR BASHFULL.

Murder will out: murder will out.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Come, cheer up, my Lord; what the deuce, your dreſs is alter'd! what's become of the ſtar and the ribband? And ſo the gay, the florid, the magnifique Lord Etheridge, dwindles down into plain Mr. Lovemore, the married man! Mr. Lovemore, your moſt obedient, very humble ſervant, Sir.

LOVEMORE.

I can't bear to feel myſelf in ſo ridiculous a circumſtance. (aſide)

SIR BASHFULL.

He has been paſſing himſelf for a Lord; has he?

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I beg my compliments to your friend Mrs. Loveit: I am much obliged to you both for your very honourable deſigns. (curtſying to him)

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

I was never ſo aſhamed in all my life!

SIR BRILLIANT.

So, ſo, ſo, all his pains were to hide the ſtar from me. This diſcovery is a perfect cordial to my dejected ſpirits.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Mrs. Lovemore, I cannot ſufficiently acknowledge the providence that directed you to pay me a viſit, though I was wholly unknown to you; and I ſhall henceforth conſider you as my deliverer.

LOVEMORE.

Ay, it was ſhe that fainted away in the cloſet, and be damned to her jealouſy. (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

By all that's whimſical, an odd ſort of an adventure this. My Lord, (advances to him) my Lord, my Lord Etheridge, as the man ſays in the play, "Your Lordſhip is right welcome back to Denmark."

LOVEMORE.

Now he comes upon me.—Oh! I'm in a fine ſituation. (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

My Lord, I hope that ugly pain in your Lordſhip's ſide is abated.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Abſurd, and ridiculous. (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

There is nothing forming there I hope, my Lord.

LOVEMORE.

I ſhall come to an explanation with you, Sir.

SIR BRILLIANT.

The tennis-ball from Lord Rackett's unlucky left hand!

LOVEMORE.

No more at preſent, Sir Brilliant. I leave you now to yourſelves, and (goes to the door in the back ſcene)—'ſdeath another fiend! I am beſet by them.

Enter LADY CONSTANT.

LOVEMORE.

No way to eſcape?—(attempts both ſtage doors, and is prevented)

LADY CONSTANT.

Mr. Lovemore, it is the luckieſt thing in the world, that you are come home.

LOVEMORE.

Ay, it's all over—all muſt come to light.

LADY CONSTANT.

I have loſt every rubber; quite broke; four by honours honours againſt me every time. Do, Mr. Lovemore, lend me another hundred.

LOVEMORE.

I would give a hundred pound you were all in Lapland. (aſide)

LADY CONSTANT.

Mrs. Lovemore, let me tell you, you are married to the falſeſt man; he has deceived me ſtrangely.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

I begin to feel for him, and to pity his uneaſineſs.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Never talk of pity; let him be probed to the quick.

SIR BASHFULL.

The caſe is pretty plain, I think, now, Sir Brilliant.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Pretty plain, upon my ſoul. Ha! ha!

LOVEMORE.

I'll turn the tables upon Sir Baſhfull, for all this—(takes Sir Baſhfull's letter out of his pocket) where is the mighty harm now in this letter?

SIR BASHFULL.

Where's the harm?

LOVEMORE. (reads)

" I cannot, my dearest life, any longer behold—

SIR BASHFULL.

Shame and confusion! I am undone. (aside)

LOVEMORE.

Hear this, Sir Bashfull—" The manifold vexations, " of which, thro' a false prejudice, I am myself the oc- " casion.

LADY CONSTANT.

What is all this?

SIR BASHFULL.

I am a lost man. (aside)

LOVEMORE.

Mind, Sir Bashfull. " I am therefore resolved, " after many conflicts with myself, to throw off the " mask, and frankly own a passion, which the fear of " falling into ridicule has in appearance suppressed."

SIR BASHFULL.

'Sdeath! I'll hear no more of it. (snatches at the letter)

LOVEMORE.

No, Sir; I resign it here, where it was directed.

LADY CONSTANT.

It is his hand sure enough.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Yes, Madam, and thoſe are his ſentiments, which he explained to me more at large.

LADY CONSTANT. (reads)

" Accept the preſents which I myſelf have ſent you;
" money, attendance, equipage, and every thing elſe you
" ſhall command; and in return, I ſhall only entreat you
" to conceal from the world that you have raiſed a flame
" in this heart, which will ever ſhew me,

" Your admirer,

" And your truly affectionate huſband,

" BASHFULL CONSTANT."

ALL.

Ha! ha!——

SIR BRILLIANT.

So, ſo, ſo! he has been in love with his wife all this time, has he? Sir Baſhfull, will you go and ſee the new comedy with me?

SIR BASHFULL.

I ſhall bluſh through the world all the reſt of my life. (aſide)

SIR BRILLIANT.

Lovemore, don't you think it a baſe thing to invade the happineſs of a friend? or to do him a clandeſtine wrong? or to injure him with the woman he loves?

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

To cut the matter ſhort with you, Sir, we have been traitors to each other; a couple of unprincipled, unreflecting profligates!

SIR BRILLIANT.

Profligates!

LOVEMORE.

Ay! both! we are pretty fellows indeed!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

I am glad to find you are awakened to a ſenſe of your error.

LOVEMORE.

I am, Madam, and I am frank enough to own it. I am above attempting to diſguiſe my feelings, when I am conſcious they are on the ſide of truth and honour. With the ſincereſt remorſe, I aſk your pardon.—I ſhould aſk pardon of my Lady Conſtant too, but the fact is, Sir Baſhfull threw the whole affair in my way; and, when a huſband will be aſhamed of loving a valuable woman, he muſt not be ſurprized if other people take her caſe into conſideration, and love her for him.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Why, faith that does in ſome ſort make his apology.

SIR BASHFULL.

Sir Baſhfull! Sir Baſhfull! thou art ruined! (aſide)

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Well, Sir, upon certain terms, I don't know but I may ſign and ſeal your pardon.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

Terms!——what terms!

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

That you make due expiation of your guilt to that lady. (pointing to Mrs. Lovemore)

LOVEMORE.

That lady, Ma'am!—That lady has no reaſon to complain.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

No reaſon to complain, Mr. Lovemore!

LOVEMORE.

No, Madam, none! for whatever may have been my imprudences, they have had their ſource in your conduct.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

In my conduct, Sir!

LOVEMORE.

In your conduct!—I here declare before this company, and I am above miſrepreſenting the matter; I here declare, that no man in England could be better inclined to domeſtic happineſs, if you, Madam, on your part, had been willing to make home agreeable.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

There I confeſs he touches me. (aſide)

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

You could take pains enough before marriage; you would put forth all your charms; practice all your arts; and make your features pleaſe by rule; for ever changing; running an eternal round of variety: and all this to win my affections: but when you had won them, you did not think them worth your keeping; never dreſſed, penſive, ſilent, melancholy; and the only entertainment in my houſe, was the dear pleaſure of a dull conjugal tete-à-tete; and all this inſipidity, becauſe you think the ſole merit of a wife conſiſts in her virtue: a fine way of amuſing a huſband, truly!

SIR BRILLIANT.

Upon my ſoul, and ſo it is——(laughing)

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Sir, I muſt own there is too much truth in what you ſay. This lady has opened my eyes, and convinced me there was a miſtake in my former conduct.

LOVEMORE.

Come, come, you need ſay no more. I forgive you; I forgive.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

Forgive! I like that air of confidence, when you know that, on my ſide, it is at worſt an error in judgment; whereas on yours——

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Po! po! never ſtand diſputing: you know each other's other's faults and virtues: you have nothing to do but to mend the former, and enjoy the latter. There, there, there, kiſs and friends. There, Mrs. Lovemore, take your reclaimed libertine to your arms.

LOVEMORE.

'Tis in your power, Madam, to make a reclaimed libertine of me indeed.

Mrs. LOVEMORE.

From this moment it ſhall be our mutual ſtudy to pleaſe each other.

LOVEMORE.

A match with all my heart. I ſhall hereafter be aſhamed only of my follies, but never aſhamed of owning that I ſincerely love you.

SIR BASHFULL.

Shan't you be aſhamed?

LOVEMORE.

Never, Sir.

SIR BASHFULL.

And will you keep me in countenance?

LOVEMORE.

I will.

SIR BASHFULL.

Give me your hand. I now forgive you all. My Lady Conſtant, I own the letter, I own the ſentiments of it, (embraces her) and from this moment I take you to my heart.—Lovemore, Zookers! you have made a man of me.

LADY CONSTANT.

If you hold in this humour, Sir Baſhfull, our quarrels are at an end.

SIR BRILLIANT.

And now I ſuppoſe I muſt make reſtitution here —(gives Lady Conſtant the buckles)

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay, ay, make reſtitution. Lovemore! this is the conſequence of his having ſome tolerable phraſe, and a perſon, Mr. Lovemore! ha! ha!—

SIR BRILLIANT.

Why, I own the laugh is againſt me. With all my heart; I am glad to ſee my friends happy at laſt. Lovemore, may I preſume to hope for pardon at that lady's hands? (points to Mrs. Lovemore)

LOVEMORE.

My dear confederate in vice, your pardon is granted. Two ſad libertines we have been. But come, give us your hand: we have uſed each other ſcurvily: for the future we will endeavour to atone for the errors of our paſt miſconduct.

SIR BRILLIANT.

Agreed; we will henceforward behave like men, who have not forgot the obligations of truth and honour.

LOVE-

LOVEMORE.

And now I congratulate the whole company, that this buſineſs has had ſo happy a tendency to convince each of us of our folly.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

Pray, Sir, don't draw me into a ſhare of your folly.

LOVEMORE.

Come, come, my dear Ma'am, you are not without your ſhare of it. This will teach you for the future, to be content with one lover at a time, without liſtening to a fellow you know nothing of, becauſe he aſſumes a title, and ſpreads a fair report of himſelf.

Mrs. BELLMOUR.

The reproof is juſt, I grant it.

LOVEMORE.

Come, let us join the company chearfully, keep our own ſecrets, and not make ourſelves the town-talk.

SIR BASHFULL.

Ay, ay; let us keep the ſecret.

LOVEMORE.

What, returning to your fears again? You will put me out of countenance, Sir Baſhfull.

SIR BASHFULL.

I have done.

LOVEMORE.

When your conduct is fair and upright, never be afraid of ridicule. Real honour and generous affection may bid defiance to all the ſmall wits in the kingdom. In my opinion, were the buſineſs of this day to go abroad into the world, it would prove a very uſeful leſſon: the men would ſee how their paſſions may carry them into the danger of wounding the boſom of a friend: and the ladies would learn, that, after the marriage rites are performed, they ought not to ſuffer their powers of pleaſing to languiſh away, but ſhould ſtill remember to ſacrifice to the Graces.

To win a man, when all your pains ſucceed,
The Way to Keep Him is a taſk indeed.

FINIS.

SONG

SONG for Mrs. CIBBER in the WAY TO KEEP HIM.

Written, at the revival of the play, by Mr. GARRICK.

I.

YE fair married dames, who ſo often deplore,
That a lover once bleſt, is a lover no more;
Attend to my counſel, nor bluſh to be taught,
That prudence muſt cheriſh, what beauty has caught.

II.

The bloom of your cheek, and the glance of your eye,
Your roſes and lilies, may make the men ſigh:
But roſes, and lilies, and ſighs paſs away,
And paſſion will die, as your beauties decay.

III.

Uſe the man that you wed, like your fav'rite GUITTAR,
Tho' muſic in both, they are both apt to jar;
How tuneful and ſoft from a delicate touch,
Not handled too roughly, nor play'd on too much!

IV.

The SPARROW and LINNET will feed from your hand,
Grow tame by your kindneſs, and come at command:
Exert with your huſband the ſame happy ſkill,
For hearts, like your birds, may be tam'd to your will.

V.

Be gay and good-humour'd, complying and kind,
Turn the chief of your care from your face to your mind:
'Tis there that a wife may her conqueſts improve,
And HYMEN ſhall rivet the fetters of LOVE.

All in the Wrong:

A

COMEDY,

Performed at the

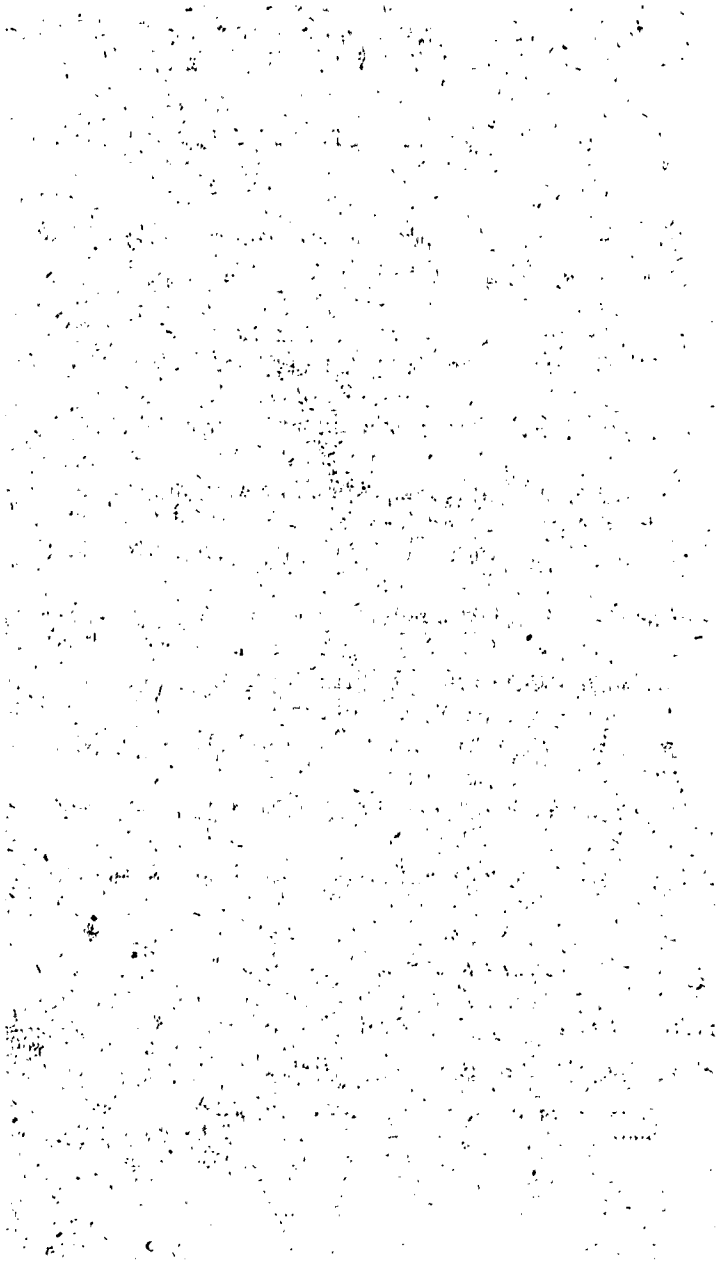
THEATRE ROYAL

IN

DRURY-LANE.

In amore hœc omnia inſunt vitia; injuriæ,
Suſpiciones, inimicitiæ, induciæ,
Bellum, pax rurſum.

TERENCE.



PROLOGUE.

Written and ſpoken by SAMUEL FOOTE, Eſq;

TO-Night, be it known to Box, Gall'ry, and Pit,
*Will be open'd the beſt * Summer-Warehouſe for Wit;*
The New Manufacture, Foote and Co. Undertakers;
Play, Pantomime, Opera, Farce,—by the Makers!
We ſcorn, like our brethren, our fortunes to owe
To Shakeſpeare, and Southern, to Otway, and Rowe.
Though our judgment may err, yet our juſtice is ſhewn,
For we promiſe to mangle no works but our own.
And moreover on this you may firmly rely,
If we can't make you laugh, that we won't make you cry.
For Roſcius, who knew we were mirth-loving ſouls,
Has lock'd up his lightning, his daggers, and bowls.
Reſolv'd that in buſkins no hero ſhall ſtalk,
He has ſhut us quite out of the Tragedy walk.
No blood, no blank verſe!—and in ſhort we're undone,
Unleſs you're contented with Frolic and Fun.
If tir'd of her round in the Ranelagh-mill,
There ſhould be but one female inclin'd to ſit ſtill;
If blind to the beauties, or ſick of the ſquall,
A party ſhould ſhun to catch cold at Vauxhall;
If at Sadler's ſweet Wells the made wine ſhould be thick,
The cheeſe-cakes turn ſour, or Miſs Wilkinſon ſick;
If the fume of the pipes ſhould oppreſs you in June,
Or the tumblers be lame, or the bells out of tune;
I hope you will call at our warehouſe in Drury;
We've a curious aſſortment of goods, I aſſure you;
Domeſtic and foreign, and all kinds of wares;
Engliſh cloths, Iriſh linnen, and French petenlairs!

* Mr. Garrick, at this time, had let his playhouſe for the ſummer months.

If

If for want of good cuſtom, or loſſes in trade,
The poetical partners ſhould bankrupts be made;
If from dealings too large, we plunge deeply in debt,
And WHEREAS iſſue out in the Muſes Gazette;
We'll on you our aſſigns for CERTIFICATES call;
Though inſolvent, we're honeſt, and give up our all.

Dramatis Perſonæ.

MEN.

Sir JOHN RESTLESS,	Mr. YATES.
BEVERLEY,	Mr. O'BRIEN.
Sir WILLIAM BELLMONT,	Mr. BURTON.
Young BELLMONT,	Mr. PACKER.
BLANDFORD,	Mr. BRANSBY.
ROBERT, Servant to Sir JOHN,	Mr. BLAKES.
BRUSH, Servant to BEVERLY,	Mr. WESTON.

WOMEN.

Lady RESTLESS,	Miſs HAUGHTON.
BELINDA,	Mrs. YATES.
CLARISSA,	Mrs. PALMER.
TATTLE,	Mrs. BRADSHAW.
TIPPET,	Miſs HIPPISLEY.
MARMALET,	Miſs MILLS.

All in the Wrong.

A COMEDY.

ACT the FIRST.

SCENE the PARK.

Enter Sir JOHN RESTLESS and ROBERT, from a houſe in the ſide ſcene.

Sir JOHN.

SIR John Reſtleſs! Sir John Reſtleſs! thou haſt played the fool with a vengeance. What devil whiſpered thee to marry ſuch a woman? —— Robert, you have been a faithful ſervant, and I value you. Did your lady go out at this door here into the park, or did ſhe go out at the ſtreet door?

ROBERT.

This door, Sir.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

Robert, I will never live in a houſe again that has two doors to it.

ROBERT.

Sir!

Sir JOHN.

I will give warning to my landlord inſtantly. The eyes of Argus are not ſufficient to watch the motions of a wife, where there is a ſtreet door, and a back door, to favour her eſcapes.

ROBERT.

Upon my word, Sir, I wiſh—you will pardon my boldneſs, Sir,—I wiſh you would ſhake off this uneaſineſs that preys upon your ſpirits. It grieves me to the heart,—it does, indeed, Sir, to ſee you in this way: baniſh your ſuſpicions: you have conceived ſome ſtrange averſion, I am afraid, to my lady, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

No, Robert; no averſion: in ſpite of me I doat upon her ſtill.

ROBERT.

Then why will you not think generouſly, Sir, of the perſon you love? My lady, I dare be ſworn—

Sir JOHN.

Is falſe to me. That embitters my whole life. I love her, and ſhe repays me with ingratitude, with perfidy, with falſehood, with——

Ro-

ROBERT.

I dare be ſworn, Sir, ſhe is a woman of honour.

Sir JOHN.

Robert, I have conſidered you as a friend in my houſe: don't you betray me too: don't attempt to juſtify her.

ROBERT.

Dear Sir, if you will but give me leave: you have been anindulgent maſter to me, and I am only concerned for your welfare. You married my lady for love, and I have heard you ſo warm in her praiſe: why will you go back from thoſe ſentiments?

Sir JOHN.

Yes, I married her for love—Oh! love! love! what miſchief doſt thou not occaſion in this world? Yes, Robert, I married her for love. When firſt I ſaw her, I was not ſo much ſtruck with her beauty, as with that air of an ingenuous mind that appeared in her countenance; her features did not ſo much charm me with their ſymmetry, as that expreſſion of ſweetneſs, that ſmile that indicated affability, modeſty, and compliance. But, honeſt Robert, I was deceived: I was not a month married, when I ſaw her practiſing thoſe very ſmiles at her glaſs: I ſaw through the artifice; plainly ſaw there was nothing natural in her manner, but all forced, all ſtudied, put on with her head-dreſs: I was alarmed; I reſolved to watch her from that moment, and I have ſeen ſuch things!

Ro-

ROBERT.

Upon my word, Sir, I believe you wrong her, and wrong yourſelf: you build on groundleſs ſurmizes; you make yourſelf unhappy, and my lady too; and by being conſtantly uneaſy, and never ſhewing her the leaſt love, you'll forgive me, Sir,—you fill her mind with ſtrange ſuſpicions, and ſo the miſchief is done.

Sir JOHN.

Suſpicions, Robert?

ROBERT.

Yes, Sir, ſtrange ſuſpicions!—My lady finds herſelf treated with no degree of tenderneſs; ſhe infers that your inclinations are fixed elſewhere, and ſo ſhe is become—you will pardon my blunt honeſty—ſhe is become downright jealous,—as jealous as yourſelf, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! Robert, you are little read in the arts of women; you little know the intricacies of their conduct; the mazes through which they walk, ſhifting, turning, winding, running into devious paths, but tending all through a labyrinth to the temple of Venus. You cannot ſee, that all her pretences to ſuſpect me of infidelity are merely a counter-plot to cover her own looſe deſigns: it is but a gauze covering, though; it is ſeen through, and only ſerves to ſhew her guilt the more.

ROBERT.

Upon my word, Sir John, I cannot ſee——

Sir

Sir JOHN.

No, Robert; I know you can't. Her ſuſpicions of me all make againſt her; they are female ſtratagems, and yet it is but too true that ſhe ſtill is near my heart. Oh! Robert, Robert, when I have watched her at a play, or elſewhere; when I have counted her oglings, and her whiſperings, her ſtolen glances, and her artful leer, with the cunning of her ſex, ſhe has pretended to be as watchful of me: diſſembling, falſe, deceitful woman!

ROBERT.

And yet, I dare aſſure you——

Sir JOHN.

No more; I am not to be deceived; I know her thoroughly, and now,—now—has not ſhe eſcaped out of my houſe, even now?

ROBERT.

But with no bad deſign.

Sir JOHN.

I am the beſt judge of that: which way did ſhe go?

ROBERT.

Acroſs the Park, Sir; that way, towards the Horſe-guards.

Sir JOHN.

Towards the Horſe-guards!——there,—there,—there, the thing is evident: you may go in, Robert.

Ro-

ROBERT.

Indeed, Sir, I——

Sir JOHN.

Go in, I ſay; go in.

ROBERT.

There is no perſuading him to his own good. [Exit.

Sir JOHN alone

Gone towards the Horſe-guards! my head aches; my forehead burns; I am cuttting my horns. Gone towards the Horſe-guards!—I'll purſue her thither; if I find her, the time, the place, all will inform againſt her. Sir John! Sir John; you were a mad-man to marry ſuch a woman. [Exit.

Enter BEVERLEY and BELLMONT, at oppoſite ſides.

BEVERLEY.

Ha! my dear Bellmont? A fellow ſufferer in love is a companion well met.

BELLMONT.

Beverley! I rejoice to ſee you.

BEVERLEY.

Well! I ſuppoſe the ſame cauſe has brought us both into the park: both come to ſigh our amorous vows in the friendly gloom of yonder walk. Belinda keeps a perpetual war of love and grief, and hope and fear in my heart: and let me ſee—(lays his hand on on Bellmont's breaſt) how fares all here? I fancy my ſiſter is a little buſy with you.

BELLMONT.

Buſy! ſhe makes a perfect riot there. Not one wink the whole night. Oh! Clariſſa, her form ſo animated! her eyes ſo——

BEVERLEY.

Prithee! truce; I have not leiſure to attend to her praiſe: a ſiſter's praiſe too! the greateſt merit I ever could ſee in Clariſſa is, that ſhe loves you freely and ſincerely.

BELLMONT.

And to be even with you, Sir, your Belinda! upon my ſoul, notwithſtanding all your laviſh praiſes, her higheſt perfection, in my mind, is her ſenſibility to the merit of my friend.

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Bellmont! ſuch a girl!
Scarce can I to heav'n excuſe
The devotion which I uſe
Unto that adored dame!
But tell me honeſtly now, do you think ſhe has ever betrayed the leaſt regard for me?

BELLMONT.

How can you, who have ſuch convincing proofs, how can you aſk ſuch a queſtion? That uneaſineſs of yours, that inquietude of mind——

BEVERLEY.

Prithee don't fix that character upon me.

BELLMONT.

It is your character, my dear Beverley: inſtead of enjoying the object before you, you are ever looking back to ſomething paſt, or conjecturing about ſomething to come, and are your own ſelf tormentor.

BEVERLEY.

No, no, no; don't be ſo ſevere: I hate the very notion of ſuch a temper: the thing is, when a man loves tenderly as I do, ſollicitude and anxiety are natural; and when Belinda's father oppoſes my warmeſt wiſhes——

BELLMONT.

Why yes, the good Mr. Blandford is willing to give her in marriage to me.

BEVERLEY.

The ſenſeleſs old dotard!

BELLMONT.

Thank you for the compliment! and my father, the wiſe Sir William Bellmont——

BEVERLEY.

Is a tyrannical, poſitive, headſtrong——

BELLMONT.

There again I thank you. But in ſhort the old couple, Belinda's father and mine, have both agreed upon the match. They inſiſt upon compliance from their children; ſo that according to their wiſe heads, I am to be married off-hand to Belinda, and you and your your ſiſter, poor Clariſſa, are to be left to ſhift for yourſelves.

BEVERLEY.

Racks and torment!

BELLMONT.

Racks and torment!—Seas of milk and ſhips of amber, man!—We are ſailing to our wiſhed for harbour, in ſpite of their machinations. I have ſettled the whole affair with Clariſſa.

BEVERLEY.

Have you?

BELLMONT.

I have, and to-morrow morning makes me poſſeſſor of her charms.

BEVERLEY.

My dear boy give us your hand: and then, thou dear rogue, and then Belinda's mine! Loll-toll-loll—

BELLMONT.

Well may you be in raptures, Sir; for here, here, here they both come.

Enter BELINDA, and CLARISSA.

BEVERLEY.

Grace was in all her ſteps; heav'n in her eye;
In every geſture dignity and love.——

BELINDA.

A poetical reception truly!—But can't your paſſion inſpire you to a compoſition of your own, Mr. Beverley?

BEVERLEY.

It inſpires me with ſentiments, Madam, which I can't find words to expreſs. Suckling, Waller, Landſdown, and all our dealers in love-verſes, give but a faint image of a heart touched like mine.

BELINDA.

Poor gentleman! what a terrible taking you are in! But if the ſonneteers cannot give an image of you, Sir, have you had recourſe to a painter, as you promiſed me?

BEVERLEY.

I have, Belinda, and here,——here is the humble portrait of your adorer.

BELINDA. (takes the picture)

Well! there is a likeneſs; but after all, there is a better painter than this gentleman, whoever he be.

BEVERLEY.

A better!——now ſhe is diſcontented. (aſide) Where, Madam, can a better be found?——If money can purchaſe him——

BELINDA.

Oh! Sir, when he draws for money he never ſucceeds. But when pure inclination prompts him, then then his colouring is warm indeed. He gives a portrait that endears the original.—

BEVERLEY.

Such an artiſt is worth the Indies!

BELINDA.

You need not go ſo far to ſeek him: he has done your buſineſs already. The limner I mean is a certain little blind god, called Love, and he has ſtamped ſuch an impreſſion of you here—

BEVERLEY.

Madam, your moſt obedient: and I can tell you, that the very ſame gentleman has been at work for you too.——

BELLMONT.

(who had been talking apart with Clariſſa)

Oh! he has had a world of buſineſs upon his hands, for we two have been agreeing what havock he has made with us.

CLARISSA.

Yes, but we are but in a kind of fool's paradiſe here: all our ſchemes are but mere caſtle-building, which your father, Mr. Bellmont, and my dear Belinda,—yours too are moſt obſtinately determined to deſtroy.

BELLMONT.

Why, as you ſay, they are determined that I ſhall have the honour of Belinda's hand in the country-dance of matrimony.

BELINDA.

Without conſidering that I may like another partner better.

BEVERLEY.

And without conſidering that I, forlorn as I am, and my ſiſter, there—who is as well inclined to a matrimonial game of romps as any girl in Chriſtendom, muſt both of us ſit down, and bind our brows with willow, in ſpite of our ſtrongeſt inclinations to mingle in the groupe.

BELLMONT.

But we have planned our own happineſs, and with a little reſolution we ſhall be ſucceſsful in the end I warrant you. Clariſſa, let us take a turn this way, and leave that love-ſick pair to themſelves: they are only fit company for each other, and we may find wherewithal to entertain ourſelves.

CLARISSA.

Let us try: turn this way.

BELINDA.

Are you going to leave us, Clariſſa?

CLARISSA.

Only juſt ſauntering into this ſide-walk: we ſhan't loſe one another.

BELINDA.

You are ſuch a tender couple! you are not tired I ſee

I ſee of ſaying pretty ſoft things to each other. Well! well! take your own way.

CLARISSA.

And if I gueſs right, you are glad to be left together.

BELINDA.

Who I?

CLARISSA.

Yes, you; the coy Belinda!

BELINDA.

Not I truly: let us walk together.

CLARISSA.

No, no, by no means: you ſhall be indulged. Adieu!—we ſhall be within call.

[Exeunt Bellmont and Clariſſa.

BEVERLEY.

My ſiſter is generouſly in love with Bellmont: I wiſh Belinda would act as openly towards me. (aſide)

BELINDA.

Well, Sir!—Thoughtful! I'll call Mr. Bellmont back, if that is the caſe.

BEVERLEY.

She will call him back. (aſide)

BELINDA.

Am I to entertain you, or you me?

BEVERLEY.

Madam!

BELINDA.

Madam!—ha! ha! why you look as if you were frightened: are you afraid of being left alone with me?

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Belinda, you know that is the happineſs of my life;—but——

BELINDA.

But what, Sir?

BEVERLEY.

Have I done any thing to offend you?

BELINDA.

To offend me?

BEVERLEY.

I ſhould have been of the party laſt night; I own I ſhould; it was a ſufficient inducement to me that you was to be there; it was my fault, and you I ſee are piqued at it.

BELINDA.

I piqued!

BEVERLEY.

I ſee you are; and the company perceived it laſt night.

night. I have heard it all: in mere reſentment you directed all your diſcourſe to Mr. Bellmont.

BELINDA.

If I did it was merely accidental.

BEVERLEY.

No, it was deliberately done: forgive my raſh folly in refuſing the invitation; I meant no manner of harm.

BELINDA.

Who imagines you did, Sir?——

BEVERLEY.

I beg your pardon, Belinda: you take offence too lighty.

BELINDA.

Ha! ha! what have you taken into your head now? This uneaſineſs is of your own making: I have taken nothing ill, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

You could not but take it ill; but by all that's amiable about you, I meant not to incur your diſpleaſure: forgive that abrupt anſwer I ſent: I ſhould have made a handſomer apology.

BELINDA.

Apology!—you was engaged, was not you?

BEVERLEY.

I ſaid ſo; I own it, and beg your pardon——

BE-

BELINDA.

Beg my pardon! for what? Ha! ha!

BEVERLEY.

I only meant——

BELINDA.

Ha! ha! can you think I ſee any thing in your meſſage to be offended at, Sir?

BEVERLEY.

I was wrong: I beg your pardon. Where you were concerned, I own I ſhould have expreſſed myſelf with more delicacy, than thoſe haſty words, I am engaged, and can't wait upon you to-night. I ſhould have told you that my heart was with you, though neceſſity dragged me another way: this omiſſion you reſented. I could learn, ſince, what ſpirits you were in the whole evening, though I enjoyed nothing in your abſence. I could hear the ſallies of your wit, the ſprightlineſs of your converſation, and on whom your eyes were fixed the whole night.

BELINDA.

They were fixed upon Mr. Bellmont, you think!

BEVERLEY.

Ay! and fixed with delight upon him, negociating the buſineſs of love before the whole company.

BELINDA.

Upon my word, Sir, whoever is your author, you are are miſinformed. You alarm me with theſe fancies, and you know I have often told you that you are of too refining a temper: you create for yourſelf imaginary miſunderſtandings, and then are ever entering into explanations. But this watching for intelligence, from the ſpies and miſrepreſenters of converſation, betrays ſtrong ſymptoms of jealouſy. I would not be married to a jealous man for the world.

BEVERLEY.

Now ſhe's ſeeking occaſion to break off. (aſide) Jealouſy, Ma'am, can never get admiſſion into my breaſt. I am of too generous a temper: a certain delicacy I own I have; I value the opinion of my friends, and when there are circumſtances of a doubtful aſpect, I am glad to ſet things in their true light. And if I do ſo with others, ſurely with you, on whom my happineſs depends, to deſire a favourable interpretation of my words and actions cannot be improper.

BELINDA.

But theſe little humours may grow up, and gather into the fixed diſeaſe of jealouſy at laſt. (Lady Reſtleſs croſſes the ſtage, and rings a bell at the door) And there now,—there goes a lady who is a victim to her own fretful imagination.

BEVERLEY.

Who is the lady pray?——

BELINDA.

My Lady Reſtleſs. Walk this way, and I will give you her whole character. I am not acquainted with her Ladyſhip, but I have heard much of her. This way. [Exeunt Belinda and Beverley.

Lady

Lady RESTLESS. (ringing at the door)

What do theſe ſervants mean? There is ſomething going forward here. I will be let in, or I will know the reaſon why. (rings again) But in the mean time, Sir John can let any body he pleaſes out at the ſtreet door: I'll run up the ſteps here, and obſerve. [Exit.

TATTLE opens the door, MARMALET follows her.

TATTLE.

Who rung this bell?—I don't ſee any body; and yet I am ſure the bell rung. Well, Mrs. Marmalet you will be going, I ſee.

MARMALET.

Yes, Mrs. Tattle; I am obliged to leave you. I'll ſtep acroſs the Park, and I ſhall ſoon reach Groſvenor Square. When ſhall I ſee you at our houſe?

TATTLE.

Heaven knows when I ſhall be able to get out: my Lady leads us all ſuch lives! I wiſh I had ſuch another place as you have of it.

MARMALET.

I have nothing to complain of.

TATTLE.

No, that you have not: when ſhall I get ſuch a gown as that you have on by my Lady? She will never fling off ſuch a thing, and give it to a poor ſervant? Worry, worry, worry herſelf, and every body elſe too.

Re-

Re-enter Lady RESTLESS.

Lady RESTLESS.

No; there is nobody ſtirring that way. What do I ſee? A huſſy coming out of my houſe!

MARMALET.

Well, I muſt begone, Mrs. Tattle: fare you well.

Lady RESTLESS.

She is dizened out too! why did not you open the door, Tattle, when I rung?

TATTLE.

I came as ſoon as poſſible, Madam.

Lady RESTLESS.

Who have you with you here? What is your buſineſs, miſtreſs? (to Marmalet)

MARMALET.

My buſineſs, Madam!

Lady RESTLESS.

In confuſion too! The caſe is plain. You come here after Sir John, I ſuppoſe.

MARMALET.

I come after Sir John, Madam!

Lady RESTLESS.

Guilt in her face! yes, after Sir John: and, Tattle,

Tattle, you are in the plot againſt me; you were favouring her eſcape, were you?

TATTLE.

I favour her eſcape, Madam! What occaſion for that? This is Mrs. Marmalet, Madam, an acquaintance of mine, Madam, as good a kind of body as any at all.

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! very fine, miſtreſs! you bring your creatures after the vile man, do you?

MARMALET.

I aſſure you, Madam, I am a very honeſt girl.

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! I dare ſay ſo. Where did you get that gown?

MARMALET.

La! Ma'am! I came by it honeſtly, my Lady Conqueſt gave it to me. I live with my Lady Conqueſt, Madam.

Lady RESTLESS.

What a complexion ſhe has! How long have you lived in London?

MARMALET.

Three years, Madam.

Lady RESTLESS.

In London three years with that complexion! it can't can't be: perhaps ſhe is painted: all theſe creatures paint. You are all ſo many painted dolls. (rubs her face with a white handkerchief) No, it does not come off. So, Mrs. Tattle, you bring your freſh country girls here to my houſe, do you?

TATTLE.

Upon my credit, Ma'am——

Lady RESTLESS.

Don't tell me: I ſee through this affair. Go you about your buſineſs, miſtreſs, and let me never ſee you about my doors again: go, go your ways.

MARMALET.

Lord, Ma'am, I ſhan't trouble your houſe. Mrs. Tattle, a good day. Here's a deal to-do, indeed! I have as good a houſe as her's to go to, whatever ſhe may think of herſelf. [Exit.

Lady RESTLESS.

There, there, there; ſee there; ſhe goes off in a huff! the way with them all. Ay! I ſee how it is, Tattle: you falſe, ungrateful—that gown was never given her by a woman, ſhe had that from Sir John. Where is Sir John?

TATTLE.

Sir John an't at home, Ma'am.

Lady RESTLESS.

Where is he? Where is he gone? When did he go out?

TATTLE.

TATTLE.

I really don't know, Ma'am.

LADY RESTLESS.

Tattle, I know you fib now. But I'll ſift this to the bottom. I'll write to my Lady Conqueſt to know the truth about that girl that was here but now.

TATTLE.

You will find I told you truth, Madam.

LADY RESTLESS.

Very well, Mrs. Pert. I'll go and write this moment. Send Robert, to give me an account of his maſter. Sir John, Sir John, you will diſtract me.

[Exit.

Re-enter BELINDA and BEVERLEY.

BELINDA.

Ay! but that quickneſs, that extreme ſenſibility is what I am afraid of. I poſitively would not have a jealous huſband for the world.

BEVERLEY.

By heaven! no earthly circumſtance ſhall ever make me think injuriouſly of you. Jealouſy!—ha! ha!—it is the moſt ridiculous paſſion!——ha! ha!

BELINDA.

You may laugh, Sir; but I know your over-refining temper too well, and I abſolutely will have it in in our marriage-articles, that I muſt not be plagued with your ſuſpicions.

BEVERLEY.

I ſubſcribe, Ma'am.

BELINDA.

I will have no enquiries where I am going to viſit; no following me from place to place: and if we ſhould chance to meet, and you ſhould perceive a man of wit, or a pretty fellow, ſpeaking to me, I will not have you fidgetting about on your chair, knitting your brow, and looking at your watch—"My "dear, is it not time to go home?—my love, the "coach is waiting:"—and then, if you are prevailed upon to ſtay, I will not have you converſe with a "Yes, Sir," and a "No, Sir," for the reſt of the evening, and then wrangle with me in the carriage all the way home, and not be commonly civil to me for the reſt of the night. I poſitively will have none of this.

BEVERLEY.

Agreed, Ma'am, agreed——

BELINDA.

And you ſhan't tell me you are going out of town, and then ſteal privately to the play, or to Ranelagh, merely to be a ſpy upon me. I poſitively will admit no curioſity about my letters. If you were to open a letter of mine, I ſhould never forgive you. I do verily believe, if you were to open my letters I ſhould hate you.

BEVERLEY.

I ſubſcribe to every thing you can aſk. You ſhall have what female friends you pleaſe; loſe your money to whom you pleaſe; dance with what beau you pleaſe; ride out with whom you pleaſe; go to what china-ſhop you pleaſe; and, in ſhort, do what you pleaſe, without my attempting to bribe your footman, or your maid for ſecret intelligence.

BELINDA.

Oh! Lud! Oh! Lud! that is in the very ſtrain of jealouſy. Deliver me! there is my father yonder, and Sir William Bellmont with him. Fly this inſtant, fly, Mr. Beverley, down that walk; any where.

BEVERLEY.

You promiſe then——

BELINDA.

Don't talk to me now: what would you be at? I am yours, and only yours; unalterably ſo. Fly—begone, leave me this moment.

BEVERLEY.

I obey; I am gone. [Exit.

BELINDA.

Now are they putting their wiſe heads together to thwart all my ſchemes of happineſs: but love, imperious love, will have it otherwiſe.

Enter

Enter Mr. BLANDFORD and Sir WILLIAM BELLMONT.

Mr. BLANDFORD.

Sir William, ſince we have agreed upon every thing——

Sir WILLIAM.

Why yes, Mr. Blandford, I think every thing is ſettled.

Mr. BLANDFORD.

Why then we have only to acquaint the young people with our intentions, and ſo conclude the affair without delay.

Sir WILLIAM.

That is all, Sir.

Mr. BLANDFORD.

As to my girl, I don't mind her nonſenſe about Beverley: ſhe muſt do as I will have her.

Sir WILLIAM.

And my ſon too, he muſt follow my directions. At to his telling me of his love for Clariſſa, it is all a joke with me. Children muſt do as their parents will have them.

Mr. BLANDFORD.

Ay! ſo they muſt; and ſo they ſhall. Hey! here is my daughter. So Belinda!——Well, my girl, Sir William and I have agreed, and you are to prepare for marriage, that's all.

BELINDA.

With Mr. Beverley, Sir?

BLANDFORD.

Mr. Beverley!

BELINDA.

You know you encouraged him yourſelf, Sir.

BLANDFORD.

Well, well! I have changed my mind on that head: my friend, Sir William, here offers you his ſon. Do as I adviſe you: have a care, Belinda, how you diſobey my commands.

BELINDA.

But, Sir——

BLANDFORD.

But, Madam, I muſt and will be obeyed. You don't like him, you ſay: but I like him, and that's ſufficient for you.

Sir WILLIAM.

And ſo it is, Mr. Blandford. If my ſon pretended to have a will of his own, I ſhould let him know to the contrary.

BELINDA.

And can you, Sir William, againſt our inclination force us both?

BLAND-

BLANDFORD.

Hold your tongue, Belinda; don't provoke me. What makes you from home? Go your ways back directly, and ſettle your mind. I tell you once for all I will have my own way. Come, Sir William, we will ſtep to the lawyer's chambers. Go home, Belinda, and be obſervant of my commands. Come, Sir William. What did you ſay? (to Belinda) You mutiny, do you? Don't provoke me. You know, Belinda, I am an odd ſort of a man when provok'd. Look ye here: mind what I ſay; I won't reaſon with you about the matter; my power is abſolute, and if you offer to rebel, you ſhall have no huſband at all with my conſent. I'll cut you off with a ſhilling; I'll ſee you ſtarve; beg an alms; live miſerable; die wretched; in ſhort, ſuffer any calamity without the leaſt compaſſion from me. If I find you an undutiful girl, I caſt you off for ever. So there's one word for all. [Exit: Sir William follows him.

BELINDA.

What will become of me?——his inhumanity overcomes me quite—I can never conſent: the very ſight of this picture is enough to forbid it. Oh! Beverley, you are maſter of my heart. I'll go this inſtant —and—heavens! I can ſcarce move. I am ready to faint.

Enter Sir JOHN.

Sir JOHN.

No tidings of her far or near.

BELINDA.

How I tremble!—I ſhall fall—no help?

Sir JOHN.

What do I ſee!—a young lady in diſtreſs!

BELINDA.

Oh!——(faints in his arms, and drops the picture.)

Sir JOHN.

She is fallen into a fit. Would my ſervants were in the way.

Lady RESTLESS. (at her window.)

Lady RESTLESS.

Where can this barbarous man be gone to?—How!—under my very window!

Sir JOHN.

How cold ſhe is!—quite cold—(lays his hand to her cheek)

Lady RESTLESS.

How familiar he is with her!

Sir JOHN.

And yet ſhe looks beautiful ſtill.

Lady RESTLESS.

Does ſhe ſo?

Sir JOHN.

Her eyes open—how lovely they look!

Lady RESTLESS.

Traitor!

Sir JOHN.

Her cheek begins to colour. Well, young lady, how fare you now, my dear?

Lady RESTLESS.

My dear too!

BELINDA.

Heavens! where am I?—

Sir JOHN.

Repoſe yourſelf awhile, or will you ſtep into my houſe?

Lady RESTLESS.

No, truly, ſhan't ſhe. Vile man! but I will ſpoil your ſport. I will come down to you directly, and flaſh confuſion in your face. [Exit from above.

Sir JOHN.

Where do you live, Madam?

BELINDA.

In Queen's-ſquare, Sir, by the ſide of the Park.

Sir JOHN.

I will wait upon you: truſt yourſelf with me. You look much better now. Lean on my arm. There, there, I will conduct you. [Exeunt.

Enter Lady RESTLESS.

Lady RESTLESS.

Now I'll make one among ye. How! fled! gone! which way? Is not that he, yonder?—No—he went into my houſe, I dare ſay, as I came down ſtairs. Tattle, Tattle, Robert. Will no body anſwer?

Enter TATTLE.

Lady RESTLESS.

Where is Sir John?

TATTLE.

La! Ma'am, how ſhould I know?

Lady RESTLESS.

Did not he go in this moment?

TATTLE.

No, Ma'am.

Lady RESTLESS.

To be ſure you will ſay ſo. I'll follow him through the world, or I'll find him out. So, ſo,—what is here?—This is her picture, I ſuppoſe. I will make ſure of this at leaſt: this will diſcover her to me, tho' tho' ſhe has eſcaped now. Cruel, falſe, deceitful man! [Exit.

TATTLE.

Poor lady! I believe her head is turned, for my part. Well! I am determined I'll look out for another place, that's a ſure thing I will.

End of the FIRST ACT.

ACT the SECOND.

Scene Sir JOHN'S Houſe.

Enter Sir JOHN and ROBERT.

Sir JOHN.

ROBERT, where is your lady?

ROBERT.

In her own room, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Any body with her?

ROBERT.

I can't ſay, Sir: my lady is not well.

Sir JOHN.

Not well! fatigued with rioting about this town, I ſuppoſe. How long has ſhe been at home?

ROBERT.

About an hour, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

About an hour!—very well, Robert, you may retire. (Exit Robert) Now will I queſtion her cloſely. So—ſo—ſo—ſhe comes, leaning on her maid: finely diſſembled! finely diſſembled! But this pretended illneſs illneſs ſhall not ſhelter her from my ſtrict enquiry. Soft a moment! If I could overhear what paſſes be-tween 'em, it might lead to the truth. I'll work by ſtratagem. The hypocrite! how ſhe acts her part! [Exit.

Enter Lady RESTLESS and TATTLE.

TATTLE.

How are you now, Madam?

LADY RESTLESS.

Somewhat better, Tattle. Reach that chair. Tattle, tell me honeſtly, does that girl live with Lady Conqueſt?

TATTLE.

She does, Madam, upon my veracity.

Lady RESTLESS.

Very well! you will be obſtinate, I ſee, but I ſhall know the truth preſently. I ſhall have an anſwer from her Ladyſhip, and then all will come out.

TATTLE.

You will hear nothing, Ma'am, but what I have told you already.

Lady RESTLESS.

Tattle, Tattle, I took you up in the country in hopes gratitude would make you my friend. But you are as bad as the reſt of them. Conceal all you know: it is of very little conſequence. I now ſee through the whole affair. Though it is the picture of a man, yet I am not to be deceived: I underſtand it all. This is ſome former gallant: the creature gave this this to Sir John as a proof that ſhe had no affection for any one but himſelf. What art he muſt have had to induce her to this!—I have found him out at laſt.

Sir JOHN. (peeping in)

Sir JOHN.

What does ſhe ſay?

Lady RESTLESS.

I have ſeen enough to convince me what kind of man he is. The fate of us poor women is hard; we all wiſh for huſbands, and they are the torment of our lives.

TATTLE.

There is too much truth in what you ſay, Ma'am.

Sir JOHN.

You join her, do you, Mrs. Iniquity?

Lady RESTLESS.

What a pity it is, Tattle, that poor women ſhould be under ſeverer reſtraints than the men are!

Sir JOHN.

You repine for want of freedom, do you?

Lady RESTLESS.

Cruel laws of wedlock! The tyrant-huſband may triumph in his infidelity. He may ſecurely trample upon all laws of decency and order: it redounds to his credit; gives him a faſhionable air of vice, while a poor woman is obliged to ſubmit to his cruelty. She remains remains tied to him for life, even though ſhe has reaſon to entertain a mortal hatred for him.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! very well argued, Madam!

Lady RESTLESS.

What a pity it is, Tattle, that we cannot change our huſbands, as we do our ear-rings or our gloves!

Sir JOHN.

There is a woman of ſpirit!

Lady RESTLESS.

Tattle! will you own the truth to me about that girl?

TATTLE.

I really have told you the truth, Madam.

Lady RESTLESS.

You won't diſcover, I ſee: very well! you may go down ſtairs.

TATTLE.

I aſſure your Ladyſhip——

Lady RESTLESS.

Go down ſtairs.

TATTLE.

Yes, Ma'am.

Lady RESTLESS.

Would I had never ſeen my huſband's face!

Sir JOHN.

I am even with you: I have as good wiſhes for you, I aſſure you.

Lady RESTLESS.

This picture here—Oh the baſe man!

Sir JOHN.

The picture of her gallant, I ſuppoſe.

Lady RESTLESS.

This is really a handſome picture: what a charming countenance! it is perfumed I fancy: the ſcent is agreeable.

Sir JOHN.

The jade, how eagerly ſhe kiſſes it!

Lady RESTLESS.

Why had I not ſuch a dear, dear man, inſtead of the brute, the monſter——

Sir JOHN.

Monſter!—She does not mince the matter: plain downright Engliſh! I muſt contain my rage, and ſteal upon her meditations—So—ſo—ſo—[Enters on tiptoe.

Lady RESTLESS.

There is no falſhood in this look.

Sir

Sir JOHN (looking over her ſhoulder.)

Oh! what a handſome dog ſhe has choſen for herſelf!

Lady RESTLESS.

With you, I could be for ever happy!

Sir JOHN.

You could, could you? (Snatches the picture.)

Lady RESTLESS. (ſcreams out.)

Mercy on me!—Oh! is it you, Sir?

Sir JOHN.

Now, Madam, now falſe one, have I caught you?

Lady RESTLESS.

You are come home at laſt, I find, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

My Lady Reſtleſs, my Lady Reſtleſs, what can you ſay for yourſelf now?

Lady RESTLESS.

What can I ſay for myſelf, Sir John?

Sir JOHN.

Ay! Madam! this picture——

Lady RESTLESS.

Yes, Sir, that picture!

Sir JOHN.

Will be evidence——

Lady RESTLESS.

Of your ſhame, Sir John.

Sir JOHN.

Of my ſhame!—'tis very true what ſhe ſays: yes, Madam, it will be an evidence of my ſhame; I feel that but too ſenſibly. But on your part——

Lady RESTLESS.

You own it then, do you?——

Sir JOHN.

Own it! I muſt own it, Madam; though confuſion cover me, I muſt own it: it is what you have deſerved at my hands.

Lady RESTLESS.

I deſerve it, Sir John! find excuſes if you will. Cruel, cruel man!——to make me this return at laſt. I cannot bear it. Oh! oh! (cries) Such black injuſtice!

Sir JOHN.

You may weep; but your tears are loſt: they fall without effect. I now renounce you for ever. This picture will juſtify me to the wide world; it will ſhew what a baſe woman you have been.

Lady

Lady Restless.

What does the man mean?

Sir John.

The picture of your gallant, Madam! the darling of your amorous hours, who gratifies your luxurious appetites abroad, and——

Lady Restless.

Scurrilous wretch! Oh! Sir, you are at your old ſtratagem I find: recrimination, you think, will ſerve your turn.

Sir John.

It is a pity, you know, Madam, that a woman ſhould be tied to a man for life, even though ſhe has a mortal hatred for him.

Lady Restless.

Artful hypocrite!

Sir John.

That ſhe can't change her huſband as ſhe does her ear-rings or her gloves.

Lady Restless.

Sir John, this is your old device: this won't avail you.

Sir John.

Had the original of this fallen to your lot, you could kiſs the picture for ever. You can gloat upon it, Madam, glue your very lips to it.

Lady RESTLESS.

Shallow artifice!

Sir JOHN.

With him you could be for ever happy.

Lady RESTLESS.

This is all in vain, Sir John.

Sir JOHN.

Had ſuch a dear, dear man fallen to your lot, inſtead of the brute, the monſter—Am I a monſter? I am, and you have made me ſo. The world ſhall know your infamy.

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! brave it out, Sir, brave it out to the laſt: harmleſs, innocent man! you have nothing to bluſh for, nothing to be aſhamed of: you have no intrigues, no private amours abroad. I have not ſeen any thing, not I.

Sir JOHN.

Madam, I have ſeen, and I now ſee your paramour.

Lady RESTLESS.

That air of confidence will be of great uſe to you, Sir. You have no convenient to meet you under my very window, to loll ſoftly in your arms!

Sir JOHN.

Hey! how!

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

Her arm thrown careleſsly round your neck! Your hand tenderly applied to her cheek.

Sir JOHN.

'Sdeath! that's unlucky—ſhe will turn it againſt me. (aſide)

Lady RESTLESS.

You are in confuſion, are you, Sir? But why ſhould you? You meant no harm—"You are ſafe "with me, my dear—will you ſtep into my houſe, "my love?"—Yes, Sir, you would fain bring her into my very houſe.

Sir JOHN.

My Lady Reſtleſs, this evaſion is mean and paultry. You beheld a young lady in diſtreſs.

Lady RESTLESS.

I know it, and you, tender-hearted man, could careſs her out of mere compaſſion: you could gaze wantonly out of charity; from pure benevolence of diſpoſition you could convey her to ſome convenient dwelling. Oh! Sir John, Sir John!

Sir JOHN.

Madam, this well acted paſſion——

Lady RESTLESS.

Don't imagine ſhe has eſcaped me, Sir.

Sir JOHN:

You may talk and rave, Ma'am; but depend upon it, I ſhall ſpare no pains to do myſelf juſtice on this occaſion. Nor will I reſt till——

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! fie upon you, Sir John: theſe artifices——

Sir JOHN.

Nor will I reſt, Madam, until I have found, by means of this inſtrument here in my hand, who your darling is. I will go about it ſtreight. Ungrateful, treacherous woman! [Exit.

Lady RESTLESS.

Yes, go, under that pretext, in purſuit of your licentious pleaſures. This ever has been his ſcheme to cloak his wicked practices: abandoned man! to face me down too, after what my eyes ſo plainly beheld! I wiſh I could wring that ſecret out of Tattle. I'll ſtep to my own room directly, and try by menaces, by wheedling, by fair means, by foul means, by every means, to wreſt it from her. [Exit.

Scene the Park.

Enter Sir JOHN and ROBERT.

Sir JOHN.

Come hither, Robert. Look at this picture.

Ro-

ROBERT.

Yes, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Let me watch his countenance. Well! well! doſt thou know it, Robert?

ROBERT.

'Tis a mighty handſome picture, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

A handſome picture!—(aſide)

ROBERT.

The fineſt lady in the land need not deſire a handſomer man, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

How well he knows the purpoſes of it!—Well! well! honeſt Robert, tell me: well—who is it?—tell me.

ROBERT.

Sir!

Sir JOHN.

You know whoſe picture it is: I know you do. Well! well! who—who—who is it?

ROBERT.

Upon my word, Sir, it is more than I can tell.

Sir JOHN.

Not know! I am convinced you do. So own the truth: don't be a villian; don't.

ROBERT.

As I am an honeſt man, Sir——

Sir JOHN.

Be an honeſt man then, and tell me. Did you never ſee ſuch a ſmooth faced, fiery eyed, warm-complexioned, taper young fellow here about my houſe?

ROBERT.

Never, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Not with my wife!—to drink chocolate of a morning, tea of an evening? Come, honeſt Robert, I'll give you a leaſe of a good farm. What ſay you? A leaſe for your life—well! well!—you may take your wife's life into the bargain. Well!

ROBERT.

Believe me, Sir John, I never ſaw——

Sir JOHN.

I'll add your child's life. Come ſpeak out—your own life, your wife's life, and your child's! now! now! a leaſe for three lives! Now, Robert!

ROBERT.

As I hope for mercy I never ſaw any ſuch a gentleman.

Sir JOHN.

Robert, Robert, you are bribed by my wife.

ROBERT.

No, as I am a ſinner, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

And the worſt of ſinners you will be, if you are a confederate in this plot againſt my peace and honour. Reflect on that, Robert.

Enter a FOOTMAN.

FOOTMAN.

Pray does not Sir John Reſtleſs live ſomewhere hereabout?

Sir JOHN.

He does, friend; what is your buſineſs with him?

FOOTMAN.

My buſineſs is with his lady.

Sir JOHN.

I gueſſed as much. (aſide)

FOOTMAN.

I have a letter here for my Lady Reſtleſs, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

A letter for my Lady!—from whom, pray?

FOOTMAN.

From my Lord Conqueſt.

Sir JOHN.

My Lord Conqueſt! very well, friend: you may give the letter to me. I am Sir John Reſtleſs: that there is my houſe. Let me have the letter: I will take care of it.

FOOTMAN.

I was ordered to deliver it into my Lady's own hand.

Sir JOHN.

The devil you was! I muſt have the letter. I'll buy it of the raſcal. (aſide) Here take this for your trouble, friend, (gives him money) And I'll take care of the letter.

FOOTMAN.

I humbly thank your Honour. [Exit.

Sir JOHN.

Now, now, now; let me ſee what this is. Now my Lady Reſtleſs; now falſe one, now. (reads)

" Madam,

" My Lady Conqueſt being gone into the country " for a few days, I have judged it proper to ſend a " ſpeedy anſwer to yours, and to aſſure you, for your " peace of mind, that you need not entertain the

" leaſt

" leaſt ſuſpicion of Marmalet, my Lady's woman.
" She has lived ſome years in my family, and I " know her by experience to be an honeſt, truſty girl,
" incapable of making miſchief between your Lady-
" ſhip and Sir John.

" I have the honour to be,

" Madam, your very humble ſervant,

CONQUEST."

So! ſo! ſo!—Marmalet is a truſty girl! one that will not make miſchief between man and wife! that is to ſay, ſhe will diſcover nothing againſt my Lady Reſtleſs! for her peace of mind he lets Madam know all this too! ſhe may go on boldly now; my Lady Conqueſt is gone into the country, Marmalet is truſty, and my Lord has given her the moſt ſpeedy notice. Very well! very well! proofs thicken upon proofs. Shall I go directly and challenge his Lordſhip?—No—no—that won't do. Watch him cloſely, that will do better. If I could have a word in private with the maid—Robert, Robert, come hither. Step to my Lord Conqueſt's—but with caution proceed—enquire there for Marmalet, the maid.

ROBERT.

I know her, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

He knows her! (aſide)

ROBERT.

She viſits our Tattle, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Viſits our Tattle!—it is a plain caſe. (aſide) Enquire for that girl: but with caution: tell her to meet meet me privately; unknown to any body; in the duſk of the evening; in the Bird-Cage walk, yonder.

ROBERT.

I will, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

And don't let Tattle ſee her. Tattle has engaged her in her miſtreſs's intereſt. I ſee how it is. Don't let any of my ſervants ſee her: go directly, Robert. Now ſhall I judge what regard you have for me. But, hark ye: Come hither! a word with you. Should it be known that this girl converſes with me; ſhould my Lady have the leaſt item of it, they will be upon their guard. Let her come wrapped up in darkneſs; concealed from every obſerver, with a maſk on. Ay, let it be with a maſk.

ROBERT.

A maſk, Sir John? Won't that make her be remarked the more?

Sir JOHN.

No, no, let her come maſked; I will make every thing ſure. Robert, bring this about for me, and I am your friend for ever.

ROBERT.

I will do my endeavour, Sir. [Exit.

Sir JOHN.

I'll now take a turn round the Park, and try if I can find the minion this picture belongs to. [Exit.

Enter

Enter BEVERLEY and BELLMONT.

BEVERLEY.

Yes, they had almoſt ſurprized us: but at ſight of her father, Belinda gave the word, and away I darted down towards the canal.

BELLMONT.

Was Sir William with him?

BEVERLEY.

Yes; they had been plotting our ruin. But we ſhall out-officer them, it is to be hoped.

BELLMONT.

Yes, and it is alſo to be feared that we ſhall not.

BEVERLEY.

Hey! you alarm me: no new mine ſprung!

BELLMONT.

Nothing but the old ſtory. Our wiſe fathers are determined. At the turning of yonder corner they came both full tilt upon Clariſſa and me.

BEVERLEY.

Well, and how! what paſſed?

BELLMONT.

Why they were ſcarcely civil to your ſiſter. Sir William fixed his ſurly eye upon me for ſome time: at laſt he began: you will run counter to my will, I ſee: you will be ever dangling after that girl: but Mr. Blandford and I have agreed upon the match: and then he peremptorily commanded manded me to take my leave of Clariſſa, and fix my heart upon your Belinda.

BEVERLEY.

And did you ſo?

BELLMONT.

And did you ſo? How can you aſk ſuch a queſtion? Sir, ſays I, I muſt ſee the lady home, and off I marched, arm in arm, with her, my father bawling after me, and I bowing to him, "Sir, your humble "ſervant, I wiſh you a good morning, Sir." He continued calling out: I kiſſed my hand to him; and ſo we made our eſcape.

BEVERLEY.

And where have you left Clariſſa?

BELLMONT.

At home; at your houſe.

BEVERLEY.

Well! and do you both continue in the ſame mind; is to-morrow to be your wedding-day?

BELLMONT.

Now are you conjuring up a thouſand horrid fancies to torment yourſelf. But don't be alarmed, my dear Beverley. I ſhall leave you your Belinda, and content myſelf with the honour of being your brother-in-law.

BEVERLEY.

Sir, the honour will be to me—But uneaſy!—ha ha!

ha!——no——no——I am not uneaſy, nor ſhall I ever be ſo again.

BELLMONT.

Keep that reſolution, if you can. Do you dine with us at the club?

BEVERLEY.

With all my heart: I'll attend you.

BELLMONT.

That's right; let us turn towards the Mall, and ſaunter there till dinner.

BEVERLEY.

No, I can't go that way yet. I muſt enquire how Belinda does, and what her father ſaid to her. I have not ſeen her ſince we parted in the morning.

BELLMONT.

And now, according to cuſtom, you will make her an apology for leaving her, when there was an abſolute neceſſity for it, and you'll fall to an explanation of circumſtances that require no explanation at all, and refine upon things, and torment yourſelf and her into the bargain.

BEVERLEY.

Nay, if you begin with your raillery, I am off: your ſervant; a l'honneur. Exit.

BELLMONT. (alone)

Poor Beverley!—Tho' a handſome fellow, and of agreeable talents, he has ſuch a ſtrange diffidence in himhimſelf, and ſuch a ſolicitude to pleaſe, that he is every moment of his life moſt ingeniouſly elaborating his own uneaſineſs.

Enter Sir JOHN.

Sir JOHN.

Not yet, not yet; nobody like it as yet. Ha! who is that hovering about my houſe?——If that ſhould be he now!——I'll examine him nearer—— Pray, Sir——what the devil ſhall I ſay?——Pray, Sir——

BELLMONT.

Sir!

Sir JOHN.

I beg pardon for troubling you, Sir; but pray what o'clock is it by your watch?

BELLMONT.

By my watch, Sir!—I'll let you know in a moment.

Sir JOHN.

Let me examine him now——(looks at him, and then at the picture)

BELLMONT.

Egad, I am afraid my watch is not right: it muſt be later. (looking at his watch)

Sir JOHN.

It is not like him——(comparing the picture)

BELL-

BELLMONT.

It does not go, I am afraid. (puts it to his ear)

Sir JOHN.

The eye——no!

BELLMONT.

Why, Sir, by my watch it wants a quarter of three.

Sir JOHN.

It is not he: and yet---no---no---no---I am ſtill to ſeek.

Enter BEVERLEY.

BEVERLEY.

Bellmont! Another word with you.

Sir JOHN.

Here comes another; they are all ſwarming about my houſe.

BEVERLEY.

I have ſeen her; I have ſeen Belinda, my boy: ſhe will be with Clariſſa in the Park immediately after dinner, you rogue.

Sir JOHN.

I want to ſee his face; this may be the original.

BEVERLEY.

Her father has been rating her in his uſual manner;

ner; but your marriage with my ſiſter will ſettle every thing.

Sir JOHN.

I'll walk round him. (ſings) Loll toll loll---(looks at him)----ha! it has his air. (ſings) Loll toll loll,---and it has his eye! Loll toll loll——

(walks to and fro)

BEVERLEY.

Prithee, Bellmont, don't be ſuch a dangling lover, but conſummate at once, for the ſake of your friend.

Sir JOHN.

It has his noſe for all the world.

BELLMONT.

Do you ſpirit your ſiſter up to keep her reſolution, and to-morrow puts you out of all pain.

Sir JOHN.

Loll toll loll---it has his complexion; the ſame glowing, hot, amorous complexion.

(ſings and looks uneaſy)

BEVERLEY.

Who is this gentleman?

BELLMONT.

An odd fellow he ſeems to be.

Sir JOHN.

Loll toll toll---it has his ſhoulders. Loll toll loll —Ay, and I fancy the mole upon the cheek too. I wiſh I could view him nearer: loll toll loll!

BE-

BEVERLEY.

He ſeems mad, I think. Where are his keepers?

Sir JOHN.

Begging your pardon, Sir---Pray (looking at him and the picture)---Pray, Sir, can you tell whether we ſhall have a Spaniſh war?

BEVERLEY.

Not I truly, Sir. (to Bellmont) Here is a politician out of his ſenſes.

BELLMONT.

He has been talking to me too: he is too well dreſſed for a poet.

BEVERLEY.

Not, if he has had a good ſubſcription.

Sir JOHN.

He has the mole ſure enough. (aſide)

BEVERLEY.

Let us ſtep this way, to avoid this impertinent blockhead.

Sir JOHN.

Ay! he wants to ſneak off. Guilt! guilt! conſcious guilt! I'll make ſure of him. Pray, Sir,—— I beg your pardon---Is not your name Wildair?

BEVERLEY.

No, Sir, Beverley at your ſervice.

Sir JOHN.

Have you no relation of that name?

BEVERLEY.

None.

Sir JOHN.

You are very like a gentleman of that name---a friend of mine, whoſe picture I have here---Will you give me leave juſt to---

(compares him with the picture)

BEVERLEY.

An odd adventure this, Bellmont.

BELLMONT.

Very odd, indeed.

BEVERLEY.

Do you find any likeneſs, Sir?

Sir JOHN.

Your head a little more that way, if you pleaſe. Ay! ay! it is he. 'Yes, a plain caſe; this is my man, or rather,---this is my wife's man.

BEVERLEY.

Did you ever know any thing ſo whimſical?

BELLMONT,

Never——ha! ha! ha!

Sir JOHN.

They are both laughing at me. Ay! and I ſhall be laughed at by the whole town, pointed at, hooted at, and gazed at!

BE-

BEVERLEY.

What do I ſee? 'Sdeath, the ſetting of that picture is like what I gave to Belinda. Diſtraction! if it is the ſame —— (drawing near him)

Sir JOHN.

He makes his approach, and means, I ſuppoſe, to ſnatch it out of my hand. But I'll prevent him, and ſo into my pocket it goes. There, lie ſafe there.

BEVERLEY.

Confuſion! he puts it up in a hurry. Will you be ſo good, Sir, as to favour me with a---

Sir JOHN.

Sir, I wiſh you a good day.

BEVERLEY.

With a ſight of that picture for a moment?

Sir JOHN.

The picture, Sir——Po!---a mere daub.

BEVERLEY.

A motive of curioſity, Sir---

Sir JOHN.

It is not worth your ſeeing. I wiſh you a good day.

BEVERLEY.

I ſhall take it as a favour.

Sir JOHN.

A paltry thing. I have not a moment to ſpare; my family is waiting dinner. Sir, I wiſh you a good morning. (runs into his houſe)

BEVERLEY.

Death and fire! Bellmont, my picture!

BELLMONT.

Oh! no---no ſuch thing.

BEVERLEY.

But I am ſure of it. If Belinda---

BELLMONT.

What relapſing into ſuſpicion again!

BEVERLEY.

Sir, I have reaſon to ſuſpect. She ſlights me, diſdains me, treats me with contempt.

BELLMONT.

But I tell you, that unhappy temper of yours—Prithee, man, leave teazing yourſelf, and let us adjourn to dinner.

BEVERLEY.

No, Sir; I ſhan't dine at all. I am not well.

BELLMONT.

Ridiculous! how can you be ſo abſurd? I'll bett you twenty pounds that is not your picture.

BE-

BEVERLEY.

Done; I take it.

BELLMONT.

With all my heart; and I'll tell you more; if it be your's, I will give you leave to be as jealous of her as you pleaſe. Come, now let us adjourn.

BEVERLEY.

I attend you. In the evening we ſhall know the truth. If it be that I gave Belinda, ſhe is falſe, and I am miſerable. [Exeunt.

Sir JOHN. (peeping after them)

There he goes; there he goes! the deſtroyer of my peace and happineſs!—I'll follow him, and make ſure that he has given me the right name; and then, my Lady Reſtleſs, the mine is ſprung, and I have done with your for ever.

End of the SECOND ACT.

ACT the THIRD.

The former Scene continues.

Enter BELINDA and CLARISSA.

BELINDA.

BUT have you really fixed every thing, Clariſſa?

CLARISSA.

Poſitively, and to-morrow morning makes me his.

BELINDA.

To-morrow morning!

CLARISSA.

Yes, to-morrow morning I releaſe Mr. Bellmont from his fetters, and reſign my perſon to him.

BELINDA.

Why, that is what we poor women, after all the victories of our charms, all the triumphs of our beauty, and all the murders of our eyes, muſt come to at laſt.

CLARISSA.

Well, and in that we but imitate the men. Don't we read of them conquering whole kingdoms, and then ſubmitting at laſt to be governed by the vanquiſhed.

Be-

BELINDA.

Very true, Clariſſa; and I don't know but you are a heroine equal in fame to any of them; nay ſuperior: for your ſcheme, I take it, is not to unpeople the world.

CLARISSA.

Prithee, don't talk ſo wildly. To tell you the truth, now that I have ſettled the affair, I begin to be alarmed at what I have done.

BELINDA.

Oh! dear, dear affectation!

CLARISSA.

Actually now, poſitively, I am terrified to death.

BELINDA.

To be ſure:—our ſex muſt play its tricks, and ſummon up all its fantaſtic train of doubts and fears. But courage, my dear, don't be frightened, for the ſame ſex within that heart of yours will urge you on, and never let you be at reſt, till you have procured yourſelf a tyrant for life.

CLARISSA.

A tyrant, Belinda! I think more generouſly of Mr. Bellmont, than to imagine he will uſurp to himſelf an ill uſe of his power.

BELINDA.

To deal candidly I am of your opinion. But tell me now, am not I a very good girl, to reſign ſuch a man to you?

CLARISSA.

Why, indeed, I muſt confeſs the obligation.

BELINDA.

Ay! but to reſign him for one whoſe temper does not promiſe that I ſhall live under ſo mild a government.

CLARISSA.

How do you mean?

BELINDA.

Why, Mr. Beverley's ſtrange caprices, ſuſpicions, and unaccountable whimſies, are enough to alarm one upon the brink of matrimony.

CLARISSA.

Well, I vow I can't help thinking, Belinda, that you are a little ſubject to vain ſurmiſes and ſuſpicions yourſelf.

BELINDA.

Now, your are an inſincere girl. You know I am of a temper too generous, too open——

CLARISSA.

I grant all that, but by this conſtant repetition of the ſame doubts, I ſhould not wonder to ſee you moſt heartily jealous of him in the end.

BELINDA.

Jealous!— Oh heavens!—jealous indeed!

CLA-

CLARISSA.

Well, I ſay no more. As to my brother, here he comes, and let him ſpeak for himſelf.

Enter BEVERLEY and BELLMONT.

BELLMONT.

Well argued, Sir: you will have it your own way, and I give up the point. Ladies your moſt obedient. I hope we have not tranſgreſſed our time.

BELINDA.

Not in the leaſt; you are both very exact. True as the dial to the ſun.

BEVERLEY. (in a peeviſh manner.)

Although it be not ſhone upon.

BELINDA.

Although it be not ſhone upon, Mr. Beverley! why with that dejected air, pray Sir?

BELLMONT.

There again now! you two are going to commence wrangling lovers once more. A-propos, Belinda—now, Beverley, you ſhall ſee—be ſo good, Ma'am as to let me ſee this gentleman's picture.

BELINDA.

His picture! what can you want it for? You ſhall have it. (ſearching her pocket.)

BELL-

BELLMONT.

Now, Beverley, do you confeſs how wrong you have been?

BEVERLEY.

Why, I begin to ſee my miſtake. Say not a word to her; ſhe'll never forgive me, if you diſcover my infirmity. (apart)

BELINDA.

It is not in that pocket: it muſt be here. (ſearches)

BELLMONT.

You have been ſad company on account of this ſtrange ſuſpicion.

BEVERLEY.

I own it; let it drop; ſay no more. (aſide)

BELINDA.

Well! I proteſt and vow—where can it be? Come, gentlemen, this is ſome trick of yours: you have it among ye. Mr. Bellmont, Mr. Beverley, pray return it to me.

BEVERLEY.

No, Ma'am, it is no trick of ours. (angrily)

BELINDA.

As I live and breathe I have not got it.

BEVER-

BEVERLEY.

What think you now, Bellmont?

BELLMONT.

She'll find it preſently, man; don't ſhew your humours: be upon your guard; you'll undo yourſelf elſe. Clariſſa, ſhall you and I ſaunter down this walk?

CLARISSA.

My brother ſeems out of humour: what is the matter now?

BELLMONT.

I'll tell you preſently: let us ſtep this way.

[Exit with Clariſſa.

BELINDA.

Well, I declare, I don't know what is come of this odious picture.

BEVERLEY.

This odious picture! how ſhe expreſſes it!

BELINDA.

You may look grave, Sir, but I have it not.

BEVERLEY.

I know you have not, Ma'am; and though you may imagine——

BELINDA.

Imagine! what do you mean?—Imagine what?

BEVER-

BEVERLEY.

Don't imagine that I am to be led blindfold as you pleaſe.

BELINDA.

Heavens! with what gravity that was ſaid!

BEVERLEY.

I am not to be deceived; I can ſee all round me.

BELINDA.

You can?

BEVERLEY.

I can, Madam.

BELINDA.

Well, and how do you like your proſpect?

BEVERLEY.

Oh! you may think to paſs it off in raillery: but that picture I have this day ſeen in the hands of another; in the hands of the very gentleman to whom you gave it.

BELINDA.

To whom I gave it?—have a care, Sir; this is another ſymptom of your jealous temper.

BEVERLEY.

But I tell you, Madam, I ſaw it in his hand.

BE-

BELINDA.

Who is the gentleman?—What's his name?

BEVERLEY.

His name, Madam!—'ſdeath! I forgot that circumſtance. Though I don't know his name, Madam, I know his perſon, and that is ſufficient.

BELINDA.

Go on, Sir: you are making yourſelf very ridiculous in this matter.—Ha! ha!——

BEVERLEY.

You may laugh, Madam, but it is no laughing matter, that let me aſſure you.

BELINDA.

Oh! brave—follow your own notions. I gave it away: I have ſcorned your preſent. Ha! ha!—Poor Mr. Beverley!

BEVERLEY.

I don't doubt you, Ma'am: I believe you did give it away.

BELINDA.

Mighty well, Sir, think ſo if you pleaſe. I ſhall leave you to your own imagination: it will find wherewithal to entertain you. Ha! ha! the ſelf-tormenting Beverley! yonder I ſee Clariſſa and Mr. Bellmont. I will join them this inſtant. Your ſervant, Sir. Amuſe yourſelf with your own fancies—ha! ha! [Exit.

BERVER-

(BEVERLEY. (alone)

Plague and diſtraction!—I can't tell what to make of this. She carries it off with an air of confidence. And yet if that be my picture, which I ſaw this morning, then it is plain I am only laught at by her. The dupe of her caprice!—I cannot bear it.

Enter BELINDA, CLARISSA, and BELLMOUR.

BELINDA.

Obſerve him now. Let us walk by him without taking any notice. Let us talk of any thing rather than be ſilent. What a charming evening!

CLARISSA.

And how gay the Park looks!—mind the gentleman!

BELINDA.

Take no notice; I beg you wont. Suppoſe we were to ſhew ourſelves in the Mall, Clariſſa, and walk our charms there, as the French expreſs it?

BELLMOUR.

Ha! ha!—Beverley!—what fixed in contemplation!

BEVERLEY.

Sir, I beg—I chuſe to be alone, Sir.

BELLMOUR, BELINDA, and CLARISSA.

Ha! ha! ha!

BE-

BEVERLEY.

Pſhaw! impertinent. (aſide)

BELINDA.

Oh! for heaven's ſake, let us indulge the gentleman. Let us leave him him to himſelf, and his ill-humours. This way, this way. You ſhall go home and have your tea with me. Mr. Beverley, (ſhe kiſſes her hand to him at ſome diſtance, and laughs at him) your ſervant, Sir: I wiſh you a good evening. A l'honneur. [Exeunt.

BEVERLEY. (alone)

Diſtraction! you may retire. Your ſervant, Madam. Racks and torment! this is too much. If ſhe has parted with the picture; if ſhe has given it away—but ſhe may only have lent it, or ſhe may have loſt it. But even that, even that is an injury to me. Why ſhould ſhe not be more careful of it? I will know the bottom of it. That's the houſe the gentleman went into. I'll wait on him directly: but they are watching me. I'll walk another way, to elude their obſervation. Ay! ay! you may laugh Ma'am, but I ſhall find out all your artifices.

[Exit.

Scene an Apartment at Sir JOHN'S.

Enter Lady RESTLESS, meeting ROBERT.

Lady RESTLESS.

Where are you going, Sir?

Ro-

ROBERT.

To my maſter's room, Madam, to leave theſe cloaths there.

Lady RESTLESS.

Stay, Sir; ſtay a moment. (ſearches the pockets) Where are his letters?

ROBERT.

Letters, my Lady! I know of no letters: I never touch his pockets.

Lady RESTLESS.

I gueſſed you would ſay ſo. You are Sir John's agent; the conductor of his ſchemes.

ROBERT.

I, Madam!

Lady RESTLESS.

You, Sir, you are his ſecretary for love-affairs.

ROBERT.

I collect his rents, my Lady, and——

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! Sir, I am not to be deceived. I know you are my enemy.

ROBERT.

Enemy, my Lady! I am ſure, as far as a poor ſervant dare, I am a friend to both.

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

Then tell me honeſtly, have not you conveyed his letters out of my way?

ROBERT.

Indeed, Madam, not I.

Lady RESTLESS.

Then he has done it himſelf. Artful man! I never can find a line after him. Where did you go for him this morning?

ROBERT.

This morning!

Lady RESTLESS.

Ay! this morning. I know he ſent you ſomewhere? Where was it?

ROBERT.

Upon my word, my Lady——

Lady RESTLESS.

Very well, Sir: I ſee how it is. You are all bent againſt me. I ſhall never be at reſt till every ſervant in this houſe is of my own chuſing. Is Tattle come home yet?

ROBERT.

No, Madam.

Lady RESTLESS.

Where can ſhe be gadding? Hark!—I hear a rap at the door. This is Sir John, I ſuppoſe. Stay, let me liſten. I don't know that voice. Who can it be? Some of his libertine company, I ſuppoſe.

ROBERT.

My Lady, if you will believe me——

Lady RESTLESS.

Hold your tongue, man: let me hear. You want to hinder me, do you?

ROBERT.

Indeed, Madam——

Lady RESTLESS.

Hold your tongue, I ſay! won't you hold your tongue? Go about your buſineſs, Sir, go about your buſineſs. What does he ſay? (liſtening) I can't hear a word. Who is below there?

Enter TATTLE, with a Capuchin on.

Lady RESTLESS.

So, Mrs. Tattle, who is that at the door?

TATTLE.

A gentleman, Madam, ſpeaking to William.

Lady RESTLESS.

And where have you been, miſtreſs? How dare you go out without my leave?

TATTLE.

Dear my Lady, don't be angry with me. I was ſo terri-terrified about what happened in the morning; and your Ladyſhip was in ſuch a perilous taking about it, that I went to deſire Mrs. Marmalet would juſtify herſelf and me.

Lady Restless.

Oh! very well, Mrs. Buſy-Body. You have been there, have you? You have been to frame a ſtory among yourſelves, have you, and to hinder me from diſcovering? But I'll go to my Lady Conqueſt myſelf. I have had no anſwer to my letter, and 'tis you have occaſioned it. Thanks to your meddling!

Tattle.

Dear my Lady, if you will but give me leave: I have been doing you the greateſt piece of ſervice. I believe, in my conſcience, there is ſomething in what you ſuſpect about Sir John.

Lady Restless.

Do you? why? how?

Tattle.

I have ſeen Mrs. Marmalet, and I have made ſuch a diſcovery!

Lady Restless.

Have you, Tattle? Well! What? ſpeak, tell me; what is it?

Tattle.

Robert has been there, Madam, with a meſſage from Sir John, who wants to ſee her in the evening; and he has deſired——

Lady RESTLESS.

Bleſſings on you, Tattle: well; go on; tell me all.

Enter a SERVANT.

Lady RESTLESS.

What do you want, Sir? Who called you? Go about your buſineſs.

SERVANT.

Madam, there is a gentleman wants to ſpeak with Sir John about a picture.

Lady RESTLESS.

I had forgot me. It was he rapped at the door, I ſuppoſe.

SERVANT.

Yes, Madam!

Lady RESTLESS.

About a picture!---This may lead to ſome further diſcovery. Deſire the gentleman to ſtep up ſtairs. (Exit Servant)---and ſo, Tattle, Robert has been there?

TATTLE.

Yes, Ma'am.

Lady RESTLESS.

And Sir John wants to ſpeak with Marmalet in the evening, and has deſired---Oh! the baſe man!---what what has he desired? Now he is discovered. What has he desired?

TATTLE.

He has desired, Ma'am,—the poor girl does not know what to make of it—She is very sober and discreet, I assure you, Ma'am—he has desired, Ma'am, in the dusk of the evening, that Mrs. Marmalet will come and——

Lady RESTLESS.

How unlucky this is? The gentleman is coming. I have a mind not to see him: and yet I will too. Tattle, do you step to my room; as soon as he goes, I will come to you, and hear all in private. (Exit Tattle) In the dusk of the evening he desires to see her: abandoned wretch!

Enter BEVERLEY.

BEVERLEY.

Madam——(bows).

Lady RESTLESS.

Pray walk in, Sir. (curtsies)

BEVERLEY.

I wanted a word with Sir John Restless, Madam.

Lady RESTLESS.

About a picture?

BEVERLEY.

Yes, Madam, a picture I had given to a lady; and however insignificant in itself, it is to me of the higheſt conſequence, as it may conduce to the explanation of an affair, in which the happineſs of my life is concerned.

Lady RESTLESS.

The lady is young?

BEVERLEY.

She is.

Lady RESTLESS.

And handſome?

BEVERLEY.

In the higheſt degree; my heart is devoted to her; and I have reaſon to ſuſpect, that a preſent from me is not of ſo much value as I could wiſh. To be plain, Ma'am, I imagine ſhe has given the picture away.

Lady RESTLESS.

As I gueſſed: my ſuſpicions are juſt.

BEVERLEY.

Your ſuſpicions, Madam! Did you ſuſpect it was given to Sir John Reſtleſs?

Lady RESTLESS.

What I know of the matter ſhall be no ſecret to you. Pray, Sir, have you ſpoke to the lady on this ſubject?

BEVERLEY.

I have, but ſhe knows nothing of the matter; ſhe has has loſt it, ſhe has miſlaid it, ſhe can give no account of it.

Lady RESTLESS.

She has given it to Sir John, Sir, to ſhew him how little ſhe regards it.

BEVERLEY.

Given it to him?

Lady RESTLESS.

Given it to him, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

Then I have no further doubt.

Lady RESTLESS.

Of what?

BEVERLEY.

Madam, I would not hurt your peace of mind; I would not give you an impreſſion of Sir John, that may affect his character.

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! Sir, ſtand upon no ceremony with him; an injurious, falſe, licentious man!

BEVERLEY.

Is that his character?

Lady RESTLESS.

Notoriouſly: he has made me miſerable; falſe to his marriage vows, and warm in the purſuit of his pleaſures abroad!—I have not deſerved it of him, Oh! Sir John! Sir John! (cries)

BEVERLEY.

She weeps; the caſe is plain, and I am undone.

Lady RESTLESS.

Pray, Sir, what is the lady's name?

BEVERLEY.

Belinda Blandford.

Lady RESTLESS.

Belinda Blandford! So far I have diſcovered, (aſide)

BEVERLEY.

Pray, Madam, have you ever ſeen her?

Lady RESTLESS.

Seen her, Sir! yes, I have ſeen too much of her.

BEVERLEY.

You alarm me, Madam. You have ſeen nothing improper, I hope.

Lady RESTLESS.

I don't know what you call improper. But, pray, what ought one to think of a young lady thrown familiarly into a gentleman's arms?

BEVERLEY.

In his arms, Madam! Sir John's arms!

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

In Sir John's! in open day; in the Park; under my very window; moſt familiarly, wantonly reclining in his very arms.

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Heavens!

Lady RESTLESS.

He claſping her with equal freedom round the waiſt!

BEVERLEY.

Falſe, falſe Belinda!

Lady RESTLESS.

Both interchanging fond, mutual glances.

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Madam, the whole is come to light, and I thank you for the diſcovery, though I am ruined by it. But give me leave: is all this certain?

Lady RESTLESS.

There can be no doubt, Sir; theſe eyes beheld their amorous meeting.

BEVERLEY.

Saw it yourſelf?

Lady RESTLESS.

Yes, all, all, Sir. Sir John I know is capable of any thing, and you know what to think of Belinda, as you call her.

BE-

BEVERLEY.

I now know what to think: I have long had reaſon to ſuſpect.

Lady RESTLESS.

You have, Sir? Then the whole affair is plain enough.

BEVERLEY.

It is ſo. I meant an honourable connection with her;——but——

Lady RESTLESS.

But you ſee, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

Yes, I ſee, Madam——you are ſure Sir John has the picture?

Lady RESTLESS.

Sure, Sir!—it is your own picture. I had it in my hands but a moment, and he flew with ardor, with impetuoſity, like a fury flew to it, and recovered it from me. What could be the meaning of all that violence?

BEVERLEY.

The meaning is too plain.

Lady RESTLESS.

And then, Sir, when charged and preſſed home with his guilt, moſt hypocritically he pretended to believe it the portrait of ſome favourite of mine. But you know, Sir, how falſe that inſinuation is.

BE-

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Madam, I can juſtify you---Ha! ha! that is but a poor evaſion, and confirms me the more in my opinion. I return you many thanks, Madam, and humbly take my leave.

Lady RESTLESS.

Sir, I am glad you thought it prudent to ſpeak to me about this affair. If any other circumſtances come to your knowledge, I ſhall take it as a favour if you will acquaint me with them; for, indeed, Sir, I am very unhappy.

BEVERLEY.

I am in gratitude bound to you, and my beſt ſervices you ſhall ever command. Madam, your moſt obedient.——Oh! Belinda! Belinda! [Exit.

Lady RESTLESS.

Now, Sir John, how will you be able to confront theſe ſtubborn facts? You are now ſeen through all your diſguiſes; detected in your true colours. Tattle within here has freſh proofs againſt you, and your man Robert, and the whole houſe. I muſt hear Tattle's ſtory this very moment. [Exit.

SCENE, the PARK.

Enter Sir JOHN.

Sir JOHN.

Yes, yes, he told me his name honeſtly enough. Beverley is his name; and my Lady Reſtleſs, now your gallant, your paramour is known. What do I ſee?

ſee? By all my wrongs, the very man again! coming out of my houſe before my face!

BEVERLEY and ROBERT come out of the Houſe.

BEVERLEY.

There, friend, there is ſomething for your trouble.

ROBERT.

I thank your Honour.

Sir JOHN.

He bribes my ſervant too; and the fellow takes it! Both in their trade; both in their trade!

BEVERLEY.

Could I have ſuſpected her of ſuch treachery? As I could wiſh: I take that to be Sir John Reſtleſs.

Sir JOHN.

This is he to whom I have ſo many obligations. (aſide)

BEVERLEY.

Well encountered: your ſervant, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

My ſervant, Sir!——I rather take it you are my lady's ſervant.

BEVERLEY.

You, if I don't miſtake, Sir John, are a pretty general ſervant of the ladies. Pray, Sir, have not you a picture of mine in your pocket?

Sir

Sir JOHN.

That, I ſuppoſe, you have heard from my good lady within there.

BEVERLEY.

Yes, Sir, and I have heard a great deal more from my Lady.

Sir JOHN.

I don't in the leaſt doubt it.

BEVERLEY.

Sir, I do not mean to work myſelf up into any choler about ſuch a trifling bauble. Since the lady has thought proper to give it to you——

Sir JOHN.

Do her juſtice, pray; ſhe did not give it; ſo far ſhe was true to you. I took it from her, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

Took it from her! That ſhews he is upon eaſy terms. (aſide) It is of no conſequence to me; I deſpiſe it, and you are welcome to make what uſe you will of it. This I will only ſay, that you have made me miſerable.

Sir JOHN.

What, I have interrupted your happineſs?

BEVERLEY.

You have.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

And no doubt you think it cruel of me ſo to do.

BEVERLEY.

Call it by what name you will: you have ruined me with the woman I doated on to diſtraction.

Sir JOHN.

A candid declaration! And ſo, Sir, you doated on her, and never reflected that you were doing me the leaſt injury?

BEVERLEY.

Injury!——I promiſe you, Sir, I will never injure you again, and ſo you may ſet your mind at peace. I here declare I never will hold farther intercourſe with her.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! that is too late for me. I have now done with her myſelf. You are very welcome to the lady, Sir! you may take her home with you as ſoon as you pleaſe. I forſwear her, and ſo I ſhall tell my lady this moment. (going)

BEVERLEY.

That will make her Ladyſhip happy, no doubt.

Sir JOHN.

Yes, I dare ſay you know it will.

BEVERLEY.

She told me as much, Sir.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

She did!---why then you may depend I ſhall keep my word, and my Lady may depend upon it too. And that, I ſuppoſe, will make you both happy, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

My happineſs is paſt recalling: I diſdain all further connection with the lady.

Sir JOHN.

Ay, you are tired of her?

BEVERLEY.

I loath her, deteſt her, hate her as much as I ever loved her.

Sir JOHN.

And ſo do I too, I aſſure you. And ſo I ſhall tell my Lady this very inſtant. Your ſervant, Sir. If I can find proof ſufficient, you ſhall hear of me, I promiſe you. [Exit.

BEVERLEY.

I ſee how it is: ſhe has been connected with him, till ſhe has pall'd his very appetite. 'Sdeath, I'll ſeek her this moment, upbraid her with her falſhood, and then—by heavens! I ſhall do it with regret. I feel a tug at my heart-ſtring: but were I to be torn piece-meal, this ſhall be our laſt interview.

Enter BELINDA, CLARISSA, and BELLMONT.

BELINDA.

Alas a-day! poor ſoul! ſee where he takes his melancholy lancholy walk. Did not I tell you, Clariſſa, that the ſtricken deer could not quit this place?

CLARISSA.

And did not I tell you, Belinda, that you could not keep away from the purſuit?

BELLMONT.

Pray, Ma'am, do you want to be in at the death, or do you mean to bring the poor thing to life again?

BELINDA.

I!—what do you mean?—You bring me this way.

CLARISSA.

Well! if that is the caſe, we had as good go home, for I want my tea.

BELINDA.

Po! not yet: it is not ſix o'clock.

BELLMONT and CLARISSA.

Ha! ha!

BELINDA.

What do ye laugh at?

CLARISSA.

At you, my dear: why, 'tis paſt ſeven. Oh! Belinda, you are the ſtricken deer, I find.

BELINDA.

Who I? Not I truly; I——

CLA-

CLARISSA.

My dear Belinda, I know you. Come, we will do the good natured thing by you, and leave you to yourſelves. Succeſs attend you. Come, Mr. Bellmont. [Exeunt

BELINDA.

Thyrſis, a youth of the inſpired train,
Fair Sachariſſa lov'd, but lov'd in vain.

BEVERLEY.

Po! po! (looking peeviſhly at her.)

BELINDA.

Won't you know me, Sir?

BEVERLEY.

Yes, Madam, I know you: it is but too true, that I know you.

BELINDA.

Still gloomy and diſcontented! Come, come, under pain of my diſpleaſure, brighten up this moment.

BEVERLEY.

Silly, idle, ridiculous!

BELINDA.

Take care of what you are about. When I proclaim a pardon, you had better embrace it, than reduce yourſelf to the neceſſity of ſighing, vowing, proteſting, writing to me, following me up and down, kneeling at my feet, imploring forgiveneſs—

BEVERLEY.

Madam, you will never again ſee me humbled to that low degree.

BELINDA.

Upon my word! ha! ha! ha!

BEVERLEY.

Oh! you may laugh, Ma'am: you have too long impoſed upon my fond, eaſy credulity. But the witchery of your charms is over.

BELINDA.

Very well, Sir! and you are your own man again.

BEVERLEY.

I am, Madam, and you may be your own woman again, or any body's woman, or every body's.

BELINDA.

You grow rude, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

It is time to wave all ceremony, and to tell you plainly, that your falſhood——

BELINDA.

My falſhood, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

Your falſhood!—I know the whole ſtory. I loved you once, Belinda, tenderly loved you, and by Heaven I ſwear, it is with ſorrow that I can no longer adore adore you. It is with anguiſh that I now bid you an everlaſting farewel. (going)

BELINDA.

Explain, Sir: what action of my life?

BEVERLEY.

Your prudence forſook you at laſt. It was too glaring; too manifeſt in open day!

BELINDA.

Too manifeſt in open day!—Mr. Beverley I ſhall hate you.

BEVERLEY.

All circumſtances inform againſt you: my picture given away!

BELINDA.

Inſolent! provoking! wrong-headed man! I'll confirm him in his error, to torment him as he deſerves. (aſide) Well, Sir, what if I choſe to give it away! I am miſtreſs of my own actions, am I not?

BEVERLEY.

I know that, Ma'am: I know that; and I am not uneaſy, Ma'am.

BELINDA.

So it ſeems—ha! ha!—why do you ſigh, poor man?

BEVERLEY.

Sigh, Madam! I diſdain it.

BELINDA.

I am glad of it; now that is ſo manly! but pray watch yourſelf well, hold a guard upon all your paſſions, otherwiſe they will make a fool of you again.

BEVERLEY.

And do you take care you don't expoſe yourſelf again. Lolling familiarly in a gentleman's arms;

BELINDA.

How!

BEVERLEY.

Here, in the Park! in open day!

BELINDA.

What can this mean?

BEVERLEY.

He inviting you to his houſe!

BELINDA.

Oh! I underſtand him now; when I fainted, all this was. I'll encourage his notion, to be revenged of his waſpiſh temper. (aſide) Well, Sir, and what then?

BEVERLEY.

What then?

BELINDA.

Ha! ha! poor Mr. Beverley!—why ſhould you be in a piteous taking, becauſe I, in the gaiety of my heart, heart, give away a picture I set no value on, or walk with a gentleman I do set a value on, or lean on his arm, or make the man happy by letting him draw on my glove.

BEVERLEY.

Or draw off your glove, Madam.

BELINDA.

Ay! or draw it off!

BEVERLEY.

Yes, or—or—or take any other liberties.

BELINDA.

Very true.

BEVERLEY.

You may make light of it, Madam, but——

BELINDA.

Why yes, a generous temper always makes light of the favours it confers.

BEVERLEY.

And some generous tempers will make light of any thing to gratify their inclinations. Madam, I have done: I abjure you; eternally abjure you. (going)

BELINDA.

Bon voyage!

BEVERLEY.

Don't imagine that you will ſee me again.

BELINDA.

Adieu!——Well, what, coming again? Why do you linger ſo? (repeats affectedly)

Thus o'er the dying lamp, the unſteady flame
Hangs quivering to a point!

BEVERLEY.

With what an air ſhe carries it? I have but this one thing more to tell you: by Heaven I loved you, to exceſs I loved you: ſuch is my weakneſs, I ſhall never quite forget you. I ſhall be glad, if hereafter I hear of your happineſs, and if I can, no diſhonour ſhall befall you.

BELINDA.

Ho! ho!—well! my obliging, generous Don Quixote, go and fight windmills, and caſtles in the air, and a thouſand phantoms of your own creation, for your Dulcinea's ſake! ho! ho! ho!

BEVERLEY.

Confuſion! Take notice, Madam, that this is the laſt time of my troubling you.

BELINDA.

I ſhall expect you to-morrow morning.

BEVERLEY.

No, never; by Heaven, never!

BE-

BELINDA.

Exactly at ten; your uſual hour.

BEVERLEY.

May I periſh at your feet, if ever again——

BELINDA.

Oh! brave! but remember ten; kneeling, beſeeching, imploring, your hand upon your heart, "Belinda, won't you forgive me?"

BEVERLEY.

Damnation!——I have done: I here bid you an eternal adieu!---farewel for ever! [Exit.

BELINDA.

I ſhall wait breakfaſt for you. Ha! ha! poor Beverley! he cannot command his temper. But, in ſpite of all his faults, I love him ſtill. What the poet ſays of great wits, may be applied to all jealous lovers;

——To madneſs ſure they're near allied;
And thin partitions do their bounds divide.

End of the THIRD ACT.

ACT the FOURTH.

Scene an Apartment in BEVERLEY'S Houſe.

Enter BEVERLEY.

SO! Belinda, I have eſcaped your ſnares: I have recovered my freedom. And yet, if ſhe had not proved falſe, what a treaſure of love and happineſs had I in ſtore! her beauty—po! no more of her beauty: it is external, ſuperficial, the mere reſult of features and complexion. A deceitful Syren, to draw the unwary into a dream of happineſs, and then wake him into wonder at the ſtorms and tempeſts that gather round him. I have done with her; I'll think no more of her. Oh! Belinda! Belinda!

Enter BRUSH.

BRUSH.

Pleaſe your Honour——

BEVERLEY.

She that in every part of life ſeemed ſo amiable!

BRUSH.

Sir!

BEVERLEY.

Under ſo fair a maſk to wear ſuch looſe deſigns!

BRUSH.

What is he muſing upon?—Sir——

BE-

BEVERLEY.

I have done with her for ever; ay, for ever. (hums a tune) I ſwear for ever (ſings)—are you there, Bruſh?

BRUSH.

Yes, your Honour: here is a letter.

BEVERLEY.

So unforeſeen, ſo unexpected a diſcovery! Well! well! well! what did you ſay, Bruſh?

BRUSH.

A letter for your Honour, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

Give it to me another time. (walks about) I'll not make myſelf uneaſy about her.

BRUSH.

I fancy your Honour will be glad to have it now.

BEVERLEY.

What did you ſay?

BRUSH.

It is a letter from Madam Belinda, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

Belinda! I won't read it: take it away.

BRUSH.

Hey! which way is the wind now? Some quarrel I ſup-

I ſuppoſe: but the falling out of lovers—muſt I take it away, Sir?

BEVERLEY.

I have done with her for ever.

BRUSH.

Have done with Madam Belinda, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Bruſh ſhe is—but I will not proclaim her ſhame. No, let me ſtill be tender of her. I will ſee her no more, Bruſh, that is all; hear from her no more: ſhe ſhall not wind herſelf about my heart again. I'll go out of town directly: order my chaiſe to the door.

BRUSH.

Had not you better defer it till morrow morning, Sir? perhaps then——

BEVERLEY.

No, no; directly; do as I bid you.

BRUSH.

Conſider, Sir, if your mind ſhould change, the trouble of coming back poſt-haſte——

BEVERLEY.

No, never; I ſay, never: what to her, who could ſmile on me, on him, on a thouſand? No; ſhe ſhall know that I am a man, and no longer the dupe of her artifice.

BRUSH.

BRUSH.

But, Sir, you know that one ſolitary tear, which, after miſerably chafing for it half an hour together, ſhe will painfully diſtil from the corner of her eye, will extinguiſh all this rage, and then——

BEVERLEY.

Po! po! you know nothing of the matter. Go, and order the chaiſe directly.

BRUSH.

Yes, Sir. I ſuppoſe a couple of ſhirts will be ſufficient, Sir?—you will hardly ſtay them out.

BEVERLEY.

Pack up all, Sir. I ſhall ſtay in the country a whole month, if it be neceſſary.

BRUSH.

An entire month, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

I am reſolved, fixed, determined; and ſo, do as I have ordered you. (Exit Bruſh)——So ſhall I diſentangle myſelf from her entirely, ſo ſhall I forget the fondneſs my fooliſh heart had conceived for her. I hate her, loath her, pity her, am ſorry for her, and love her ſtill. I muſt expel this weakneſs: I will think no more of her: and yet---Bruſh! Bruſh!---I may as well ſee her letter too: only to try what her cunning can ſuggeſt.

Enter

Enter BRUSH.

BEVERLEY.

You may as well leave the letter, Bruſh.

BRUSH.

Yes, Sir; I thought as much. [Exit.

BEVERLEY. (alone)

Now what varniſh will ſhe put upon the matter! —(reads) "The falſe gaiety of my heart, through "which my dear Beverley might have read my real "anguiſh at our laſt meeting, has now ſubſided. If "you will come to me, I will not laugh at your in-"quietude of temper, but will clear all your "doubts, and ſhew you how much I am, my deareſt "Beverley, unalterably your's,

"BELINDA BLANDFORD."

Pſhaw! po! ſatisfy my doubts! I have no doubts; I am convinced. Theſe arts prevail no more. Ha! ha! (laughs peeviſhly)—"My dear "Beverley" (reads, and tears the letter by degrees)— "real anguiſh"—ha! ha! (tears another piece)— "inquietude of temper"—(another piece)—"clear "all your doubts"—Po! po! po!—ha! ha!—damnation!—I'll think no more of her—(tears another bit)—ha! ha!—"deareſt Beverley"—ha! ha! —artfull woman!—"unalterably your's"——falſe! falſe! falſe!—(tears another piece)—I'll not make myſelf uneaſy about her. Perfidy! treachery! and ingratitude! (fixes his eye, looks uneaſy, and tears the letter in a violent paſſion)

Enter CLARISSA and BELLMONT.

CLARISSA.

So, brother!

BELL-

BELLMONT.

Beverley!

BEVERLEY.

Siſter, your ſervant: Mr. Bellmont, your's.

CLARISSA.

You ſeem melancholy, brother.

BEVERLEY.

No, not I. I am in very good ſpirits.

CLARISSA.

Ha! ha! my dear brother, that is ſeen through: you are now upon the rack.

BEVERLEY.

What about a woman, a falſe, ungrateful woman!

BELLMONT.

Whom you ſtill admire.

CLARISSA.

To whom you'll be upon your knees in five minutes.

BEVERLEY.

You are miſtaken: I am going out of town.

BELLMONT.

But you will take your leave.

BEVERLEY.

I have done that, once for all.

CLARISSA.

Has not ſhe writ to you?

BEVERLEY.

She has; and there,---there you ſee the effect of her letter. You will ſee that I ſhall maintain a proper firmneſs on the occaſion.

BELLMONT.

My dear Beverley, have done with this mockery: you but deceive yourſelf.

BEVERLEY.

You want to deceive me, Sir: but it is in vain, What, plead for treachery, for falſehood, for deceit?

CLARISSA.

No, Sir, but for my friend, my lovely friend, for Belinda, for truth, for innocence.

BEVERLEY.

You don't know all the circumſtances.

CLARISSA.

But we do know all the circumſtances, and, my dear brother, you have behaved very ill.

BEVERLEY.

Heaven knows, I have not, and yet, Heaven knows, I ſhould be glad to be convinced I have.

CLA-

CLARISSA.

I will be your friend, and give you a hint. We women are ſoft and compaſſionate in our nature; go to her without delay, fall at her feet, beg her pardon, drop a tear or two, and all will be well again.

BEVERLEY.

Do you come to make ſport of me? May contempt and beggary attend me; may all the calamities of life befal me; may ſhame, confuſion, and diſquiet of heart for ever ſting me, if I hold further intercourſe with her; if I do not put her from my thoughts for ever. Did you leave her at home?

CLARISSA.

We did.

BEVERLEY.

Well, let her ſtay there: it is of no conſequence to me. How did ſhe bear what paſſed between us?

CLARISSA.

Like a ſweet girl as ſhe is: ſhe behaved like an angel: I ſhall love her better than ever for her good humour.

BEVERLEY.

Oh! I don't doubt her good humour. She has ſmiles at command. Let her ſmile or not ſmile, 'tis all alike to me: did ſhe ſay any thing?

CLARISSA.

She told us the whole ſtory, and told it in tears too.

BE-

BEVERLEY.

Ay! them ſhe can command too! But I have no curioſity about her: Was ſhe in tears?

CLARISSA.

She was, and wept bitterly. How could you, brother, behave ſo raſhly to ſo amiable a girl? Have you a pleaſure in being the cauſe of her uneaſineſs?

BEVERLEY.

I the cauſe?—you wrong me, by Heaven you wrong me: my Lady Reſtleſs was the cauſe. She told me ſuch things; ſhe planted daggers in my very heart.

CLARISSA.

You planted daggers in Belinda's heart. And it was barbarous. What, becauſe a lady has not ſtrength enough to bear up againſt a father, who is reſolved to give her away to another, and becauſe ſhe faints out of exceſſive tenderneſs for you, and in that diſtreſs meets accidental relief from Sir John Reſtleſs at his own door?

BEVERLEY.

How!

CLARISSA.

And becauſe my Lady Reſtleſs ſees this out of her window, and has a perverſe talent of miſinterpreting appearances into realities, to her own diſadvantage; you muſt therefore fill your head with ungenerous ſuſpicions? Oh! for ſhame, brother, how could you?

BE-

BEVERLEY.

But, is all this true?—is it really the caſe?

BELLMONT.

How can you doubt it? You know Belinda too well: it is the caſe, man.

BEVERLEY.

I ſhould be glad to find it ſo.

CLARISSA.

Well! I tell you it is ſo. How could you think otherwiſe? you know ſhe has the beſt heart in the world, and is ſo nice of honour, that ſhe ſcorns all falſhood and diſſimulation.

BELLMONT.

Ha! ha! my dear Beverley, you have done the abſurdeſt thing.

BEVERLEY.

Why, if what you ſay can be made to appear—— but then ſhe'll never forgive my paſt behaviour.

CLARISSA.

Po! you talk as if you was wholly unletter'd in the tempers of women. My dear brother, you know, you men can do what you pleaſe with us, when you have once gained an intereſt in our hearts. Go to her, I ſay, go to her, and make your peace.

BEVERLEY.

May I depend upon what you ſay?

CLARISSA.

You may.

BEVERLEY.

Then I'll fly to her this inſtant, humble myſelf to her, and promiſe by all my future life to attone for this brutal injury.

Enter BRUSH.

BRUSH.

The chaiſe is at the door, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

You may put up again; I ſhan't go out of town.

BRUSH.

No, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

No—ha! ha!——you may put up, and let me have the chariot directly.

BRUSH.

Yes, Sir; I knew it would come to this. [Exit.

BEVERLEY.

But do you think ſhe will forgive me?

CLARISSA.

She will; love will plead your cauſe.

BE-

BEVERLEY.

My dear ſiſter, I am for ever obliged to you; and Bellmont, I thank you too. How could I wrong her ſo? I ſhall behold her once again. I cannot help laughing at my own raſhneſs. Is the chariot ready? —I won't ſtay for it; I am on the wing, my dear Belinda, to implore forgiveneſs. And ſo ſhe fainted away in the Park, and my Lady Reſtleſs ſaw Sir John afford her relief?—Ha! ha! ha!—whimſical enough. Ha! ha! ha! what a ſtrange conſtruction her crazy temper put upon it? Ha! ha! how could the woman be ſo fooliſh? My dear Belinda, I will fly to you this moment—ha! ha! (going, returns) Sir John ſhall give me back the picture, and, on my knees, I will once more preſent it to her.

CLARISSA.

So! ſo! you are come to yourſelf, I find.

BELLMONT.

I knew it would be ſo.

BEVERLEY.

She ſhall have the picture. I'll find Sir John directly: and then—ha! ha! how could I be ſuch a madman! ha! ha!—ſiſter, your ſervant. Bellmont, yours. Ha! ha! what a piece of work has that fooliſh Lady Reſtleſs made for us all?

[Exit, ſinging.

CLARISSA.

Let us follow him: I muſt be preſent at their reconciliation. [Exit with Bellmont.

Scene an Apartment at BELINDA'S.

Enter BELINDA.

BELINDA.

This raſh, unaccountable man! how could he entertain ſuch a ſuſpicion! ungrateful Beverley! he almoſt deſerves I ſhould never ſee him again. Tippet! I ſhan't be eaſy till I hear from him. Tippet!

Enter TIPPET.

BELINDA.

Is the ſervant returned from Mr. Beverley's?

TIPPET.

Not yet, Madam.

BELINDA.

I wonder what keeps him. I am upon thorns, till I ſee the dear, ungenerous man, and explain every thing to him. Oh! Mr. Beverley! how could you treat me ſo? But I was partly to blame; my Lady Reſtleſs inflamed his mind, and I ſhould not have trifled with his paſſion. Is the other ſervant returned from Sir John Reſtleſs?

TIPPET.

He is, Madam.

BE-

BELINDA.

And what anſwer?

TIPPET.

Sir John will wait upon you himſelf, Madam, directly.

BELINDA.

Very well! I muſt get him to ſet every thing in its true light, and juſtify my conduct to Mr. Beverley. And yet the uncertainty of Beverley's temper alarms me ſtrangely. His eternal ſuſpicions! but there is nothing in that: my future conduct, my regard for him will cure that diſeaſe, and then——

TIPPET.

I dare be ſworn it will, Ma'am.

BELINDA.

Yes, I think it will: when he knows me better, he will learn to think generouſly of me. On my part, I think I can be ſure he will meet with nothing but open, unſuſpecting love.

Enter a SERVANT.

SERVANT.

Sir John Reſtleſs, Madam.

BELINDA.

Shew him in. Tippet, do you leave the room.

Enter Sir JOHN.

Sir JOHN.

In compliance with your commands, Madam——

BELINDA.

I am obliged to you, Sir, for the trouble you have been pleaſed to give yourſelf. A particular circumſtance has happened in your family, to my utter diſquiet.

Sir JOHN.

Madam, there have happened things in my family, to my utter diſquiet too.

BELINDA.

I am ſorry for that, Sir. I have been made quite unhappy, and muſt beg, as it is in your power, that you will be kind enough to remove the cauſe of my uneaſineſs.

Sir JOHN.

Whatever I can do, you may command.

BELINDA.

Sir, I thank you, and muſt tell you, that your Lady has done me the moſt irreparable injury.

Sir JOHN.

She has done the ſame to me. My injuries are irreparable too. But how has ſhe injured you, Madam?

BE-

BELINDA.

She has ruined me, Sir, with the man I love to diſtraction.

Sir JOHN.

Now, here ſomething elſe will come to light. (aſide)—How, how has ſhe done that, Madam?

BELINDA.

She has entirely drawn off his affections from me.

Sir JOHN.

And fixed them upon herſelf, I ſuppoſe.

BELINDA.

I don't ſay that, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

But I dare ſay it; and I believe it.

BELINDA.

Pardon me, Sir, I don't charge the lady with any thing of that kind. But ſhe has unaccountably taken it into her head to be jealous of me.

Sir JOHN.

Jealous of you!

BELINDA.

Her Ladyſhip ſaw the little offices of civility I received from you this morning: ſhe miſunderſtood every thing, it ſeems, and has told the gentleman with whom I was engaged in a treaty of marriage, that improper freedoms have paſſed between us.

Sir JOHN.

Artifice! artifice! her uſual policy, Madam, to cover her own libertine ways.

BELINDA.

I don't mean to ſay any thing harſh of the Lady. But you know what foundation there is for this, and I hope will do me juſtice.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! Madam, to the world, to the wide world I'll juſtify you. I will wait upon the gentleman. Who is he, Madam? What's his name?

BELINDA.

Beverley, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Beverley!

BELINDA.

Yes, Sir; you ſeem ſurpriſed. Do you know him, Sir?

Sir JOHN.

Yes, yes, I know him; and he ſhall know me: my reſentment he ſhall feel; he ſhall be anſwerable to me.

BELINDA.

Anſwerable to you!

Sir

Sir JOHN.

To me, Madam. I told you at firſt this was her ſcheme to ſhelter herſelf; and he, I ſuppoſe, is combined with her to give this turn to the affair, and to charge me with infidelity. But you, Ma'am, can witneſs for me.

BELINDA.

I can, Sir: but can Mr. Beverley be capable of a diſhonourable action?

Sir JOHN.

That point is clear enough. He has injured me in the higheſt degree, deſtroyed my happineſs.

BELINDA.

How, Sir! are you ſure of this?

Sir JOHN.

He has given her his picture; I caught her with her eyes rivetted to it; I heard her admiration, her praiſes of it; her wiſhes that ſhe had been married to ſuch a man. I ſaw her print a thouſand kiſſes on it; and in the very fact I wreſted it out of her hand.

BELINDA.

If I imagined him capable of what you ſay, I ſhould ſcarcely be willing to join myſelf to him for life. Quarrel with me about his picture, and at the ſame time give it to another!

Sir JOHN.

Lady Reſtleſs had the picture. Without doubt, you muſt be very happy with a man of his gallantry.

BE-

BELINDA.

Happy, Sir! I ſhould be miſerable; diſtracted; I ſhould break my heart. But do you think you have ſufficient proof?

Sir JOHN.

I have ſeen him coming out of my houſe ſince, clandeſtinely, ſhunning every obſervant eye, with the characters of guilt in his face; and all the diſcourſe I had with him, ſerved only to convince me the more.

BELINDA.

Abandoned wretch! was this the love he profeſſed for me? Sir, I have only to hope you will vindicate me in this matter. I commend myſelf to your honour, and I thank you for this favour.

Sir JOHN.

Our evidences will mutually ſpeak for each other, and confound their dark deſigns. Madam, I take my leave.

BELINDA.

Sir, your moſt obedient.

Sir JOHN.

The gentleman ſhall feel my indignation.

BELINDA.

You cannot treat him too ſeverely.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

I will expoſe him, I promiſe you. Madam, your humble ſervant. [Exit.

BELINDA.

Oh! Mr. Beverley, could I have imagined this? Falſe! falſe man! and yet how ſhall I forget him! but I will make an effort, tho' it pierce me to the quick. I will tear him from my heart. This moment I will write to him, and forbid him to ſee me more. [Exit.

SCENE, the PARK.

Enter Sir JOHN.

Sir JOHN.

If I can procure ſufficient evidence, I ſhall bring the matter to a divorce, and make an example of them all. Would Marmalet were come: this is her time to a moment. If I can worm the ſecret out of her—Is not that ſhe yonder?—Not quite day-light enough to diſtinguiſh, but I think I perceive a perſon maſked. Hiſt! hiſt!—Mrs. Marmalet—ſhe comes this way: it is ſhe. Mrs. Marmalet, your ſervant.

Enter a perſon MASKED.

Sir JOHN.

You are very good, Mrs. Marmalet——

MASK.

Bleſs my heart, I am ſcared out of my ſenſes.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

What's the matter, pray? What's the matter?

MASK.

Oh Sir! I tremble like a leaf. I was accoſted in a rude manner by ſome gentlemen yonder; I can't ſtay here, let us go into your houſe, Sir; I beg you will.

Sir JOHN.

My houſe? Would not any other houſe do as well?

MASK.

Oh! no, Sir; not for the world.

Sir JOHN.

Why my wife is not at home, and ſo I think I may venture: not but I had rather it were elſewhere.

MASK.

Indeed, Sir John, I am frightened out of my ſenſes. You will do me a favour if you will take me into the houſe.

Sir JOHN.

Say no more: it ſhall be ſo. Robert——

ROBERT. (opening the dooor)

Is that Sir John?

Sir JOHN.

Your Lady is not at home, Robert, is ſhe?

Ro-

ROBERT.

No, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Then do you go in, and take care that nobody ſees Mrs. Marmalet with me. Come, I'll ſhew you the way. [Exeunt.

Scene in Sir JOHN's Houſe.

Enter TATTLE, and BEVERLEY.

TATTLE. (as ſhe enters)

Ay, poor lady! ſhe is unfortunate, indeed; and, poor gentleman, he is as jealous as my Lady to the full. There has been a deal to do about that picture you mention, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

That will be explained preſently: I'll wait till he comes home. I can't poſſibly go without ſpeaking to him.

TATTLE.

Indeed, you had better not ſtay, Sir. You don't conſider the miſchief your being in the houſe may occaſion.

BEVERLEY.

Miſchief! how do ye mean?

TATTLE.

Lord, Sir! I would not have you ſtay for the world: I would not indeed. You can call again in an an hour, Sir, and you'll certainly find him at home, then. Bleſs my heart, Sir!—I fancy that's his voice. Do, dear Sir! you'll be the ruin of my Lady, If he ſees you here, Sir, waiting in his houſe: he'll be perſuaded you come after my Lady; the world will never beat it out of his head.

BEVERLEY.

But I ſhall give him to underſtand——

TATTLE.

He won't underſtand any thing. Oh Lud! oh! Lud! he's coming up: I'll run and look. [Exit.

BEVERLEY.

What a flurry the woman is in! a fooliſh jade! I muſt ſpeak with him now.

TATTLE. (entering)

It is he as I am alive, Sir; and there is a woman in a maſk with him.

BEVERLEY.

A woman in a maſk! Zoons, if that ſhould be Belinda! my mind miſgives me ſtrangely! (aſide)

TATTLE.

Do, dear Sir; you look like a good natured gentleman; let me hide you out of the way, Sir. You would not be the deſtruction of a poor ſervant.

BEVERLEY.

A maſk coming home with him! I muſt know who that is. I won't leave the houſe without knowing.

If

If I could conceal myſelf—have you any private place, Mrs. Tattle?

TATTLE.

That is the very thing I mean, Sir. Let me conceal you in that cloſet till he paſſes through this room. He never ſtays long here. It won't take you two minutes. Do, ſweet Sir, I'll down on my knees to you.

BEVERLEY.

I muſt know who it is. Come, diſpoſe of me as you will. If this ſhould be Belinda! Exit.

TATTLE.

Heavens bleſs you, Sir, for this goodneſs! I'll lock the door to make ſure work of it. I was never ſo frightened in my life. [Exit.

Enter Sir JOHN and a perſon maſked.

Sir JOHN.

Mrs. Marmalet, I am obliged to you for this favour. I wanted a word or two with you.

MASK.

So Robert informed me, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Did he tell you my buſineſs?

MASK.

No, Sir.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

Look ye then: if you will gratify me in what I ſhall aſk, you may command any thing. Now you may be uncovered.

MASK.

La! Sir—I hear a noiſe: I am afraid ſomebody's coming: I ſhall be ſeen.

Sir JOHN.

Huſh! no; there's nobody. If you will indulge me on this occaſion, I am yours for ever. Here, here is a purſe of money for you.

MASK.

But if this ſhould come to the knowledge of your Lady, I am ruined and undone.

Sir JOHN.

No, no, I'll take care of you.

MASK.

Will you, Sir?

Sir JOHN.

I will. But come; let me remove this from your face.

MASK.

But ſomebody may come.

Sir JOHN.

I'll lock the door. There, now we are ſafe.

MASK.

you, that liſteners ſeldom hear any good of themſelves, and to ſhew you how wrong it is to be too ſuſpicious, my dear: was it not well done?—ha! ha! ha!

Lady RESTLESS.

And do you laugh at me too, Sir? Make me your ſport? I'll go and get pen and ink this moment.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! do ſo, Ma'am; do ſo—ha! ha! you'll only expoſe yourſelf: go and write, Madam—ha! ha! ha!—

Lady RESTLESS.

I will, Sir. (going) The door is locked. This won't ſucceed, Sir. I ſuppoſe you have the key. Ay! I'll lay my life you have, and ſome one or other of your creatures is locked in there.

Sir JOHN.

There, again! This is of a piece with all your vain ſurmiſes. Ha!. ha! you are mighty ſilly, indeed, you are.

Lady RESTLESS.

I will ſearch that cloſet. I am determined I will.

Sir JOHN.

Do ſo, Ma'am, do ſo. Ha! ha! I can't but laugh at her

Lady RESTLESS.

I'll have the door broke open, if you won't give me the key.

Sir JOHN.

Ha! ha! ha!—How you expoſe yourſelf.

Lady RESTLESS.

Will you give me the key, Sir?

Sir JOHN.

Ha! ha! ha! it is too ridiculous!

Lady RESTLESS.

Mighty well, Sir. Tattle!—who waits there? I will find out all your artifices. Tattle, I ſay.

Sir JOHN.

Tol de rol lol!—ha! ha! ha! a ſilly woman!

Enter TATTLE.

Lady RESTLESS.

Do you know any thing of the key of that cloſet, Tattle?

TATTLE.

The key, Ma'am! I have it, Ma'am.

Lady RESTLESS.

Give it to me.

TATTLE.

That is, I have it not, Ma'am. Don't have it, Ma'am, don't aſk for it. (aſide to her)

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

Don't aſk for it! but I will have it. Give me the key this inſtant.

Sir JOHN.

How! is ſhe not willing to give it? There is ſomething in this, then. Give the key this moment, you jade, give it to me.

Lady RESTLESS.

You ſhan't have it, Sir. What, you want to hinder me! give the key to me.

TATTLE.

Dear heart! I have loſt it, Ma'am. Better not have it, Ma'am. (aſide)

Sir JOHN.

Give it to me this moment, I ſay.

Lady RESTLESS.

If you don't let me have it, it is as much as your place is worth.

TATTLE.

The devil is in it! there it is then. Let me make my eſcape. [Exit.

Lady RESTLESS.

Now, Sir, we ſhall ſee, now, now.

Sir JOHN.

Ay, now ſearch, if you will. (laughing at her)

Lady RESTLESS. (unlocking the door)

You ſhall be found out, I promiſe you—Oh! (ſcreams out)

Sir JOHN.

What's the matter now?

Lady RESTLESS.

Heavens! who have we here?

Sir JOHN.

Oh there is ſomebody there then!

Enter BEVERLEY.

BEVERLEY.

Madam——(bows to her)

Sir JOHN.

By all that's falſe, here he is again!

Lady RESTLESS.

What, in the name of wonder, brings you here, Sir?

Sir JOHN.

Oh Madam! you know his buſineſs, and I know his buſineſs; and the gentleman knows his buſineſs. There he is, Ma'am! there is the gentleman waiting for you; true to his appointment, you ſee. Sir, your humble ſervant. My Lady Reſtleſs, your humble ſervant. Now write to your brother; do. I ſhould be glad to know what you can ſay now. Now now; is the caſe plain now?

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

I am in amaze! I don't know what to make of this.

BEVERLEY.

Sir, however odd this may appear——

Sir JOHN.

Ay! now ſettle it between yourſelves: give it what turn you will, Sir, ſhe will confirm it. You need not be afraid, Sir; you will agree in your ſtory; ſhe is quick of invention, and I dare ſay you are pretty quick too!

BEVERLEY.

Sir, I muſt beg you will put no forced conſtruction upon this matter.

Sir JOHN.

And you beg the ſame, Ma'am, don't you?

BEVERLEY.

Sir, I beg to be heard. My buſineſs here is to deſire you will return me the picture which you have in your poſſeſſion! it is now become dear to me, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

I dare ſay it is.

BEVERLEY.

And muſt be returned.

Sir JOHN.

It is of equal value to me. It ſhall riſe in evidence againſt you both.

Lady RESTLESS.

Evidence againſt me! explain yourſelf. How did you get in here? What's your buſineſs? What brought you hither? What's your errand?

Sir JOHN.

Ay, Sir, ſpeak; how did you get in here? What's your buſineſs? What brought you hither? What's your errand?

BEVERLEY.

Vexation! I am beſet by them both at once.

Lady RESTLESS.

Speak, Sir, explain.

Sir JOHN.

Ay! Sir, explain,

BEVERLEY.

Sir, if you will give me leave, I will ſatisfy you entirely. I aſſure you, Sir, and you too, Ma'am, that the liberty I have taken with your cloſet is entirely owing to your maid, Tattle.

Sir JOHN.

The jade, I don't doubt it, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

To prevent, if poſſible, the interpretation now put upon ſeeing me in this houſe.

Sir JOHN.

And it was well contrived, Sir. Oh! my Lady Reſtleſs.

Lady RESTLESS.

By all that's juſt, I knew nothing of it.

BEVERLEY.

Nothing, upon my honour, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! I knew you would both agree.

BEVERLEY.

As I am a gentleman, I tell you the real fact.

Sir JOHN.

You need not, Sir: I know the real fact.

BEVERLEY.

I have no time to loſe in frivolous altercation: I muſt now deſire the picture, directly.

Sir JOHN.

I wiſh you a good evening.

BEVERLEY.

I ſhall not ſtir without it. I ſhould be glad you would comply without a quarrel. I muſt be obliged to—

Sir JOHN.

Ay! now her prize-fighter begins. (aſide) I deſire you will quit my houſe, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

I am not to be trifled with. If you don't return it by fair means, I ſhall be forced to draw.

Sir JOHN.

There again now! ſhe has ſet him on to cut my throat: But I will diſappoint her. She is a worthleſs woman, and I won't fight about her. There, Sir, there is your trinket. I ſhall have proof ſufficient without it.

BEVERLEY.

Upon my honour, Sir, you will have no proof of any tranſgreſſion of mine. If you ſuſpect your lady from theſe appearances, you wrong her much, I aſſure you.

Lady RESTLESS.

Sir, I deſire you will explain all this.

BEVERLEY.

Call up your maid, Madam, and then——

Sir

Sir JOHN.

No, Sir, no more of it. I am ſatisfied. I wiſh you good night.

BEVERLEY.

When you are willing to liſten to reaſon, I ſhall be ready to convince you of your error. Madam, you may depend I ſhall do juſtice to your honour upon all occaſions. And now I take my leave.

[Exit.

Sir JOHN.

Now, my Lady Reſtleſs, now! you are thoroughly known! all your artifices are known; Mr. Beverley is known! my Lord Conqueſt is known.

Lady RESTLESS.

My Lord Conqueſt, Sir! I deſpiſe all your imputations. My Lord Conqueſt's maid, Sir! what can you ſay to that?

Sir JOHN.

Very well, Madam! 'tis now my turn to write to your brother, and I promiſe you I will do it.

Lady RESTLESS.

You will write, Sir! you will write! Well! his aſſurance is unequalled. (aſide) You will write! That is pleaſant indeed!—write, Sir; do; you will only expoſe your weakneſs—ha! ha! you make yourſelf very ridiculous! you do indeed!—ha! ha!

Sir

Sir JOHN.

'Sdeath! Madam, am I to be inſulted with a contumelious laugh into the bargain!

Lady RESTLESS.

Why, my dear, this was all done—to—to—to—cure you of your jealouſy; for I knew you would act as you have done, and ſo I reſolved to do as I have done. Was it not well done, my dear,? Ha! ha!

Sir JOHN.

Damnation! this is too much: it is beyond all patience.

Lady RESTLESS.

Ha! ha! ha! the tables are turned, I think (ſings and laughs.)

Sir JOHN.

Let me tell you, it is no laughing matter. You are a vile woman; I know you, and the world ſhall know you: I promiſe you it ſhall.

Lady RESTLESS.

I am clear in my own conviction, and your ſlander I deſpiſe: nor ſhall your artifices blind me or my friends any longer. Sir, as you ſay, it is no laughing matter. I promiſe you, you ſhall never diſhonour me again in this houſe.

Sir JOHN.

And I promiſe you, Madam, that you ſhall never diſhonour me in any houſe.

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

Injurious, falſe, perfidious man!

Sir JOHN.

Deceitful, wanton! wanton woman!

[Exeunt, at oppoſite doors.

End of the FOURTH ACT.

ACT the FIFTH.

Scene an Apartment at Mr. BLANDFORD'S.

Enter BELINDA.

BELINDA.

UNgenerous, falſe, deceitful Beverley! under that fair appearance could I imagine that he harboured ſo much treachery? Attached to Lady Reſtleſs; engaged in a diſhonourable intrigue with the wife of another, and yet profeſſing an affection for me, with ardour profeſſing it, and for me only! he is likely to regard the honour of the marriage-bed, who is ready to commit a treſpaſs on the happineſs of his neighbour. It was Providence ſent Sir John Reſtleſs to pay me a viſit. The whole is now brought to light, and, Mr. Beverley, I have done with you for ever. I ſhall now obey my father's commands. By giving my hand to Sir William Bellmont's ſon, I ſhall puniſh an undeſerving libertine for his treachery.

Enter TIPPET.

BELINDA.

Well, Tippet, have you done as I ordered you?

TIPPET.

I have, Madam.

BE-

BELINDA.

The perfidious man! did you ever know ſuch behaviour?

TIPPET.

He is a traitor, like the reſt of them.

BELINDA.

After all the regard I profeſſed for him! after ſo many ardent vows and proteſtations as he has made me!

TIPPET.

The hours that he has ſighed away at your feet!

BELINDA.

I will baniſh him from my thoughts. My reſolution is fixed, and ſo I have told my father. Is Sir William Bellmont with him?

TIPPET.

He is, Ma'am: they are both in cloſe talk: they are over their glaſs, and are ſo overjoyed at the change of your mind.

BELINDA.

And I applaud myſelf for what I have done.—Oh! Mr. Beverley! you have forced me to this extremity. —Here, take this letter, Tippet, and give it to him with your own hands.

TIPPET.

He ſhall have it. (takes the letter)

BE-

BELINDA.

Where are all his letters?

TIPPET.

Here, Ma'am. (ſhews a parcel)

BELINDA.

The bracelets, and the pocket book?

TIPPET.

I have them ſafe.

BELINDA.

Very well: take his preſents home to him; and do you hear? Bring me back all the fooliſh letters I writ to him.

TIPPET.

Never doubt me: I won't quit the houſe without them. Exchange is all fair.

BELINDA.

That letter will tell him, that though I now break with him in a manner, that may ſeem abrupt, his character and conduct have compelled me to it. Be ſure you confirm that to him.

TIPPET.

He ſhall hear it all, and roundly too.

BELINDA.

Very well; you may go.—Tippet,—aſk his man.—as if from yourſelf,—careleſsly,—as it were by accident, cident,---whether his maſter has talked of me? And what he ſaid, Tippet?

TIPPET.

I know Mr. Bruſh: I can wheedle it out of him, I warrant me.

BELINDA.

Get at the particulars: not that I care: I don't want to know any thing about the ungrateful man. It does not concern me now. My fooliſh weakneſs is over: let him care as little for me as I do for him: you may tell him ſo.

TIPPET.

Your meſſage ſhan't loſe in the carrying.

BELINDA.

Well, that's all: you may begone.

TIPPET.

Yes, Ma'am. (going)

BELINDA.

Mind what I have ſaid.

TIPPET.

You may truſt to me. (going)

BELINDA.

Don't forget a word of it.

TIPPET.

No, not a ſyllable. (going)

BELINDA.

And hark ye: tell him how eaſy, how compoſed I am. That will gall him. You ſee, Tippet, I am quite unconcerned. (forcing a ſmile)

TIPPET.

Yes, Ma'am: you don't ſeem to fret in the leaſt.

BELINDA.

It is eaſy to perceive that I am not all diſconcerted. You may ſee how gay I am upon the occaſion. (affecting to laugh)

TIPPET. (laughing)

Oh! yes, Ma'am: you make quite a laughing matter of it.

BELINDA.

Very true: a perfect air of indifference!---Well, I have done.---Tell him that upon no account will I ever exchange a word with him; that I will never hear of him; never think of him; never ſee him; and never, upon any conſideration, admit the ſmalleſt intercourſe; no, never; I will have no more to do with him.

TIPPET.

I have my leſſon, Ma'am, and I am glad you are ſo reſolved upon it. (going)

Enter a SERVANT.

SERVANT.

Mr. Beverley, Madam.

TIP-

TIPPET.

You muſt not let him up ſtairs: my Lady will never ſee his face.

BELINDA.

Yes, I think I may ſee him: ſhew him up. I will ſee him once more, and tell him all myſelf. It will come better from me, Tippet.

TIPPET.

Yes, Ma'am, you will do it with a better grace; and your reſolution will melt away like a bit of ſugar in your mouth.

BELINDA.

My reſolution is not to be altered: you may withdraw, Tippet.

TIPPET.

Yes, Ma'am.——Ah! ſhe has a hankering after him ſtill. [Exit.

BELINDA.

I ſhall now take my leave of him.---But then, my friend Clariſſa! can I rob her of her lover? She has not deſerved it at my hands. Though Mr. Beverley has deceived me, muſt I be falſe to honour, and to friendſhip?

Enter BEVERLEY.

BEVERLEY.

Belinda! how gladly do I once again behold——

BELINDA.

And with what reſentment have not I reaſon to behold, Sir——

BEVERLEY.

You have, Belinda; you have reaſon I grant it: forgive the raſh words my folly uttered.

BELINDA.

Miſtake me not, Sir: it is not your words I quarrel with: your actions, Mr. Beverley, your actions, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

They are not to be extenuated: but ſurely, after the letter you honoured me with——

BELINDA.

Sir, I have heard every thing ſince I was guilty of that folly.

BEVERLEY.

Heard! what?

BELINDA.

Diſſemble if you will: but this muſt be the laſt of our converſing together. My maid will return you whatever I have received from you: all my ſilly letters I muſt deſire you to deliver to her; and then viſit me no more, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

Belinda!---you will not wound me thus. Here is the picture which cauſed that unlucky miſtake between tween us. I have recovered it from Sir John Reſtleſs.

BELINDA.

From my Lady Reſtleſs, Sir?

BEVERLEY.

Madam!

BELINDA.

Oh! fie, Sir; no more; I have done.

BEVERLEY.

You muſt, you muſt accept it. Thus on my knees I beg you. Will you, Belinda? (takes her hand)

BELINDA.

Leave me, Sir: let go my hand, Mr. Beverley: your falſehood——

BEVERLEY.

My falſehood! By all the ——

BELINDA.

Your falſehood, Sir: Sir John Reſtleſs has told me all; every circumſtance.

BEVERLEY.

He has told you! what has he told? His life ſhall anſwer it.

BELINDA.

You have deſtroyed my peace of mind for ever.

Nay, you yourſelf have forced me into the arms of another.

BEVERLEY.

What do I hear?

BELINDA.

My Lady Reſtleſs will rejoice at the news: the event will not be unpleaſing to her; but ſhe is welcome: let her enjoy her triumph.

BEVERLEY.

You aſtoniſh me, Belinda: what does all this mean?

BELINDA.

It means, that, in obedience to the commands of a father, I have agreed to marry Mr. Bellmont.

BEVERLEY.

Mr. Bellmont!---him!---marry him! it is very well, Ma'am: I expected it would come to this, and my Lady Reſtleſs is only mentioned on this occaſion, as a retort for my accuſation about Sir John. I underſtand it; and, by Heaven! I believe that whole ſtory.

BELINDA.

You do, Sir!

BEVERLEY.

I do: fool that I was to humble myſelf to you. My pride is now piqued, and I am glad, Madam, as glad as you can be, to break off for ever.

BE-

BELINDA.

Oh! Sir, I can be as indifferent on my part. You have only to ſend me back my letters, and——

BEVERLEY.

Agreed, agreed. I'll go home this moment, and ſend them all. Before I go, Madam, here is your own picture, which you had given me with your own hands. Mr. Bellmont will be glad of it; or Sir John Reſtleſs will be glad of it; or any body will be glad of it: you need not be at a loſs.

BELINDA.

Very like, Sir. (takes the picture) Tyrant, tyrant man! to treat me in this barbarous manner. (cries)

BEVERLEY.

Tears! Belinda! (approaching)—Belinda!

BELINDA.

No more of your inſidious arts. I will hear no more. Oh! my heart, my heart will break. I did not think it was in your nature to behave as you have done; but—farewel for ever. [Exit.

BEVERLEY.

Belinda! hear me but ſpeak. By Heaven, my Lady Reſtleſs—She is gone: 'ſdeath! I have been duped by her all this time; I will now ſummon up all that is man within me, and in my turn deſpiſe her.

Enter TIPPET.

TIPPET.

If you are going home, Sir, I will take the things with me now.

BEVERLEY.

Yes, I am going: I will leave this deteſted——

TIPPET.

This abominable place, Sir. (laughing at him)

BEVERLEY.

This hell!

TIPPET.

Ha! ha!—ay! Sir, this hell.

BEVERLEY.

This manſion of perfidy, ingratitude, and fraud,

TIPPET.

Very right, Sir, let us go.

BEVERLEY.

And yet—Tippet, you muſt not ſtir. Indulge me but a little. It is all a miſunderſtanding, this.

TIPPET.

My lady will have no more to ſay to you. You may take the things, Sir: my lady reſigns them to you, Sir.

BE-

BEVERLEY.

Oh! Tippet, uſe your intereſt with her. Keep them in the houſe till I return. I will clear up this whole matter preſently. I muſt not loſe her thus. [Exit.

TIPPET.

Poor gentleman! he ſeems in a lamentable way. Well, I fancy for my part he is a true lover after all; that's what I do; and my young lady, I fear, is——

Enter BELINDA.

TIPPET.

Madam, Madam, Madam, you are to blame; you are, indeed.

BELINDA.

Is he gone?

TIPPET.

He is, Ma'am.

BELINDA.

Did he ſay any thing? Was he uneaſy? Or did he carry it off with a——

TIPPET.

Oh! Madam, he went away ſighing ſhort, his heart throbbing, his eyes brimful, his looks pale: you are to blame, you are, indeed, Madam. I dare be ſworn he has never proved falſe.

BE-

BELINDA.

Oh! Tippet, could I be ſure of that!

TIPPET.

But you are not ſure of the contrary. Why won't you ſee my Lady Reſtleſs? See her directly, Madam; go to her now before it is too late; before the old folks, who are putting their heads together, have ſettled the whole affair. Dear Ma'am, be adviſed. I hear them coming. They will hurry you into a match, and you'll repent of it. How cruel this is! Here they come.—No, it's Madam Clariſſa.

Enter CLARISSA.

CLARISSA.

So, Belinda; you have thrown things into fine confuſion. You have involved yourſelf, and my brother, and Mr. Bellmont, and every body in moſt terrible difficulties.

BELINDA.

My dear Clariſſa, here have been ſuch doings beyour brother and me.

CLARISSA.

So I find. I met him as I came hither. You have had fine doings indeed. I have heard the whole; my brother has told me every thing.

TIPPET.

Madam, Madam; I hear your father. Sir William Bellmont is with him: they are coming up ſtairs.

BE-

BELINDA.

I am not in a diſpoſition to ſee them now. Clariſſa ſuſpend your judgment; ſtep with me to my own room, and I will then give you ſuch reaſons as, you will own yourſelf, ſufficiently juſtify my conduct.

CLARISSA.

The reaſons muſt be ingenious, that can make any kind of apology for ſuch behaviour: I ſhall be glad to hear you.

BELINDA.

Very well, follow me quickly. You will find that my reſolution is not ſo raſh as you imagine.

[Exit with CLARISSA.

TIPPET.

They have got into a rare puzzle; and how they will get out of it, is beyond my dexterity; and ſo let 'em manage as well as they can.

Enter BLANDFORD, Sir WILLIAM, and Young BELLMONT.

BLANDFORD.

Sir William, we have made a good day's work of it: the writings will be ready to-morrow morning. Where is Belinda? I thought ſhe was in this room.

TIPPET.

She is gone to her own room, Sir: ſhe is not well.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

She has changed her mind, perhaps: I ſhall have no faith in this buſineſs, till it is all concluded.

BLANDFORD.

Changed her mind, ſay you? No, no; I can depend upon her. I'll bring her to you this moment, and you and your ſon ſhall hear a declaration of her mind out of her own lips. Tippet, where is Belinda?

TIPPET.

I'll ſhew you the way, Sir. [Exit with Blandford.

Sir WILLIAM.

Now we ſhall ſee what authority you have over your daughter. I have your promiſe, George: if ſhe conſents, you will be ready to comply with the wiſhes of your father.

BELLMONT.

Sir,—you may depend, that is as far as matters are in my power: but you know, as I told you already, the lady has a ſettled, rooted averſion to me.

Sir WILLIAM.

Averſion!—ſhe can change her mind, can't ſhe? Women have no ſettled principle. They like to-day, and diſlike to-morrow. Beſides, has not her father promiſed her to you in marriage? If the old gentleman likes you, what have you to do with her averſion?

BELLMONT.

To do with it? A great deal, I am afraid. You are not now to learn, that, when a young lady marries againſt her inclination, billet-doux, aſſignations, plots, intrigues, and a terrible et cætera of female ſtratagem, mount into her brain, and the poor huſband in the mean time—

Sir WILLIAM.

Come, lad, don't play the rogue with your father. Did not you promiſe me, if ſhe made no objection, that there would be no obſtacle on your part?

BELLMONT.

I promiſed to be ſure, but yet I can't help thinking—

Sir WILLIAM.

And I can't help thinking that you know how to equivocate. Look you, George, your words were plain downright Engliſh, and I expect that you will perform to the very letter. I have fixed my heart upon this match. Mr. Blandford and I have paſſed the day at the Crown and Rolls to read over the deeds. I have been dining upon parchment as I may ſay. I now tell you once for all, you muſt be obſervant of my will and pleaſure.

BELLMONT.

To end all diſpute, Sir, if the lady—(aſide) She will never conſent; I may ſafely promiſe.—If the lady, Sir, can at once forget her engagements with my friend Beverley——

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

You will then forget Clariſſa: fairly ſpoken. Come, I am ſatisfied. And now, now we ſhall ſee.

Enter BLANDFORD.

BLANDFORD.

Sir William give me joy: every thing goes as I wiſh. My daughter is a complying girl. She is ready to obey my commands. Clariſſa is with her, beſeeching, wrangling; complaining, ſoothing; now in a rage, and now in tears; one moment expoſtulating, and the next imploring; but all in vain; Belinda holds her reſolution; and ſo young gentleman you are now completely happy.

BELLMONT.

Death to my hopes! can this be true? (aſide)

BLANDFORD.

Sir William give me your hand upon it. This will not only be a match of prudence, but of inclination.

Sir WILLIAM.

There, George, there is news for you: your buſineſs is done.

BLANDFORD.

She owns very frankly that her heart has been hitherto fixed upon a worthleſs man: ſhe renounces him for ever, and is willing to give her hand as I ſhall direct.

BELL-

BELLMONT.

What a dilemma am I brought into? (aſide)

Sir WILLIAM.

George, what's the matter, boy? You a bridegroom? Wounds! at your age I could cut a caper over the moon upon ſuch an occaſion.

BELLMONT.

I am more ſlack-mettled, Sir: I cannot leap quite ſo high.

Sir WILLIAM.

A cup too low, I fancy. Let us go and finiſh our bottle. Belinda ſhall be my toaſt. I'll give you her health in a bumper. Come, Mr. Blandford: I want to waſh down the cobwebs of the law. [Exit.

BLANDFORD.

I attend you, Sir William.—Mr. Bellmont, follow us: we muſt have your company: you are under par: come, we will raiſe you a note higher.

[Exit.

BELLMONT.

You have ſunk me ſo low, that I ſhall never recover myſelf. This behaviour of Belinda's!—— Can ſhe think her treachery to one lover will recommend her to another?

Enter CLARISSA.

CLARISSA.

Mr. Bellmont, I wiſh you joy, Sir. Belinda has conſented; and you have done the ſame. You are both conſenting. The match is a very proper one. You will be finely paired.

BELLMONT.

You are miſinformed, Clariſſa; why will you do me this injuſtice?

CLARISSA.

Injuſtice! Mr. Blandford has reported every thing: he has done you juſtice: he has told us how eaſily you have been perſuaded: don't imagine that I am hurt. I reſign all pretenſions: I can be prevailed upon with as much eaſe as you, Sir: I can copy the eaſy compliance of Mr. Bellmont.

BELLMONT.

If you will but hear me: moderate your anger.

CLARISSA.

Anger!—anger indeed! I ſhould be ſorry any thing that has happened were of conſequence enough to diſturb my peace of mind.—Anger!—I ſhall die with laughing at the thought. You may be falſe to your friends, Sir; falſe to your vows; you may break every ſolemn engagement; Mr. Blandford wiſhes it; Belinda wiſhes it; and why ſhould not you comply? Follow the dictates of your heart, Sir.

BELLMONT.

Whatever has happened, Clariſſa, I am not to blame.

CLARISSA.

I dare ſay not; and here is a lady will ſay the ſame.

Enter

Enter BELINDA.

BELINDA.

Spare your reproaches, Clariſſa.—Mr. Bellmont, you too may ſpare me. The agitations of my mind diſtreſs me ſo, I know not which way to turn myſelf. The provocation I have had——

CLARISSA.

Provocation, Madam!—from whom?

BELINDA.

From your brother: you need not queſtion me; you know what his conduct has been.

BELLMONT.

By Heaven you wrong him; and ſo you will find in the end.

CLARISSA.

Your own conduct, Madam! will that ſtand as clear as my brother's? My Lady Reſtleſs, I believe, has ſomething to ſay. It will become you to refute that charge.

BELINDA.

Downright malice, my dear: but I excuſe you for the preſent.

Enter TIPPET.

TIPPET. (to Belinda)

Your chair is ready, Ma'am.

BELINDA.

Very well: I have not a moment to loſe: I am determined to know the bottom of this whole affair. Clariſſa, when I return, you will be better diſpoſed to hear me.

CLARISSA.

You need not trouble yourſelf, Ma'am: I am perfectly ſatisfied.——Tippet, will you be ſo good as to order my chair?

BELINDA.

Well; ſuſpend your judgement. This buſineſs is of importance: I muſt leave you now.

[Exit with Tippet.

BELLMONT.

Clariſſa, if you knew how all this wounds me to the heart.

CLARISSA.

Oh! keep your reſolution; go on with your very honourable deſign: inclination ſhould be conſulted; and the neceſſity of the caſe, you know, will excuſe you to the world.

BELLMONT.

Command your temper, and the whole ſhall be explained.

CLARISSA.

It wants no explanation: it is too clear already.

BELL-

BELLMONT.

A moment's patience would ſet every thing right.—'Sdeath! one would imagine that Lad Reſtleſs had been ſpeaking to you too. This is like the reſt of them: downright jealouſy!

CLARISSA.

Jealouſy!—Upon my word, Sir, you are of great conſequence to yourſelf: but you ſhall find that I can with perfect ſerenity baniſh you, and your Belinda, entirely from my thoughts.

Enter TIPPET.

TIPPET.

The chairmen are in the hall, Ma'am.

BELLMONT.

Let me but ſpeak to you.

CLARISSA.

No, Sir: I have done: I ſhall quit this houſe immediately. (going) Mrs. Tippet, could you let me have pen, ink, and paper, in your lady's room?

TIPPET.

Every thing is ready there, Ma'am.

CLARISSA.

Very well:—I'll go and write a letter to Belinda. I'll tell her my mind, and then adieu to all of you.

[Exit with Tippet.

BELLMONT.

How perverſe and obſtinate!

Enter Sir WILLIAM.

Sir WILLIAM.

Well, George, every thing is ſettled.

BELLMONT.

Why really, Sir, I don't know what to ſay. I wiſh you would conſider——

Sir WILLIAM.

At your tricks again?

BELLMONT.

I am above an attempt to deceive you: but if all circumſtances were known—I am not fond of ſpeaking detractingly of a young lady; but for the honour of your family, Sir, let us deſiſt from this match.

Sir WILLIAM.

Roguery, lad! there's roguery in this.

BELLMONT.

I ſee you will force me to ſpeak out. If there is, unhappily, a flaw in Belinda's reputation——

Sir WILLIAM.

How?

BELL-

BELLMONT.

This is no time to diſſemble. In ſhort, Sir, my Lady Reſtleſs, a worthy lady here in the neighbourhood, has diſcovered a connection between her and Sir John Reſtleſs; Sir John and Lady Reſtleſs lived in perfect harmony till this affair broke out. The peace of the family is now deſtroyed. The whole is come to the knowledge of my friend Beverley: with tears in his eyes, with a bleeding heart, (for he loved Belinda tenderly) he has at laſt muſtered up reſolution, and taken his final leave.

Sir WILLIAM.

Ay! can this be true?

BELLMONT.

It is but too true; I am ſorry to report it. And now, Sir, judge yourſelf—Oh!—here comes Mr. Blandford: 'tis a dreadful ſcene to open to him; a terrible ſtory for the ear of a father! You had beſt take no notice; we need not be acceſſary to a young lady's ruin: it is a family affair, and we may leave them to patch it up among themſelves, as well as they can.

Sir WILLIAM.

If theſe things are ſo, why then the caſe is altered.

Enter BLANDFORD.

BLANDFORD.

Hey! what's in the wind now? You two look as grave! what's come over you? For my part, my ſpirits are above proof with joy: I am in love with my daughter for her compliance, and I fancy I ſhall throw in an odd thouſand more, to enliven the honey-moon.

Sir WILLIAM.

Mr. Blandford, we are rather in a hurry, I think. We had better not precipitate matters.

BLANDFORD.

Nay, if you are for changing your mind—Look you, Sir; my daughter ſhall not be trifled with. Where is ſhe? Where is my girl? Who anſwers there?

Enter TIPPET.

BLANDFORD.

Where's Belinda?

TIPPET.

She is not gone far, Sir: juſt ſtept out upon a moment's buſineſs to Sir John Reſtleſs.

Sir WILLIAM.

Gone to Sir John Reſtleſs! (aſide)

BELLMONT.

You ſee, Sir. (to Sir William)

BLANDFORD.

I did not think ſhe knew Sir John.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

Yes, ſhe knows him: ſhe has been acquainted with him for ſome time paſt.

BLANDFORD.

What freak has ſhe got in her head? She is not gone after her Mr. Beverley, I hope. Zookers! this has an odd appearance. I don't like it: I'll follow her this moment.

Sir WILLIAM.

You are right: I'll attend you.—Now George, this will explain every thing. (aſide)—Come, Mr. Blandford, this may be an eſcape: young birds will wing their flight.

BLANDFORD.

Well, well, ſay no more: we ſhall ſee how it is. Come, Sir William: it is but a ſtep. [Exit.

BELLMONT. (to Tippet)

Where is Clariſſa?

Sir WILLIAM. (looking back)

What loitering, George?

BELLMONT.

I follow you, Sir. (Exit Sir William) Clariſſa is not gone, I hope.

TIPPET.

Gone, Sir!—She is writing, and crying, and wiping her eyes, and tearing her paper, and beginning again, and in ſuch a piteous way!

BELLMONT.

I muſt ſee her: ſhe muſt come with us. If Lady Reſtleſs perſiſts in her ſtory, who knows what turn this affair may take? Come; Mrs. Tippet, ſhew me the way. [Exeunt.

Scene the Hall in the Houſe of Sir JOHN RESTLESS: a loud rap at the door; and enter ROBERT.

ROBERT.

What a hurry you are in there?—This is my Lady, I ſuppoſe. Where can ſhe have been?—Now for more confuſion. If ſhe finds Madam Belinda with Sir John, we are all blown up again.

Sir JOHN. (peeping in)

Robert, Robert: is that your Lady?

ROBERT.

Mercy on us! She is coming, I believe, Sir. (looks out) I ſee her chair: it is my Lady.

Sir JOHN.

Don't let her know that Belinda is in the houſe.

ROBERT.

Not if I can help it. Truſt to me, Sir. (Exit Sir John) Here ſhe comes. What has ſhe been about?

A Chair

A Chair is brought into the Hall.

Lady RESTLESS. (coming out of the Chair)
Is Sir John at home!

ROBERT.
I fancy he is, my Lady.

Lady RESTLESS.
Has any body been with him?

ROBERT.
He has been all alone, writing letters in his ſtudy: he deſired not to be interrupted.

Lady RESTLESS.
I ſhall not interrupt him, I promiſe him. You never will tell me any thing, Robert: I don't care who comes after him. To-morrow I ſhall quit this houſe, and then he may riot in licentious pleaſure. If he aſks for me, I am not well; I am gone to my own apartment: I hope to ſee no more of him. (going)

CHAIRMAN.
Shall your Ladyſhip want the chair any more to-night?

Lady RESTLESS.
I don't know what I ſhall want. Leave the chair there: you may wait. [Exit.

CHAIRMAN.
Ay! always a waiting job.
(puts the chair aſide; Exeunt Chairman, and Robert.)

Enter

Enter Sir JOHN and BELINDA.

BELINDA.

If you will but permit me to ſay a word to her—

Sir JOHN.

Excuſe me for the preſent: I beg you will.

BELINDA.

A ſhort interview with Lady Reſtleſs might clear up all my doubts: what objection can you have?

Sir JOHN.

A million of objections. You do not know the conſequence of being ſeen in this houſe. She will interpret every thing her own way. I am unhappy, Madam, while you ſtay.

BELINDA.

There is more cruelty in your refuſal than you can imagine. Mr. Beverley's character is in queſtion: it is of the laſt importance to me to know the whole truth.

Sir JOHN.

You know it all, Madam. Mr. Beverley's character is too clear. Proofs thicken, and grow ſtronger every hour. Since the viſit I paid you this very day, I have made another diſcovery. I found him lurking here in my houſe.

BELINDA.

Found him here, Sir?

Sir

Sir JOHN.

Found him here. He was lying in ambuſh for another amorous meeting.

BELINDA.

If there is no miſtake in this buſineſs——

Sir JOHN.

Miſtake! May I truſt my own eyes? I ſaw him; I ſpoke to him; I taxed him with his guilt. He was concealed in her cloſet: does that amount to proof? Her maid Tattle ſtationed him there. My Lady was privy to it: ſhe favoured the ſtratagem. Are you ſatisfied now, Madam?

BELINDA.

The particulars of this diſcovery, Sir John, may convince me: tell me all, Sir: you will oblige me.

Sir JOHN.

Enquire no more for the preſent. You will oblige me, Madam. Robert ſhall ſee you ſafe home. I would not have my Lady find us together: I think I hear her: no, no. In a day or two the particulars will be known to the wide world. Where is Robert?—He ſhall conduct you home. My peace and happineſs require it.

BELINDA.

My peace and happineſs are deſtroyed for ever. If your ſtory be true—

Sir

Sir JOHN.

It is too true: I wiſh you a good night. I am miſerable while you are here.—Robert

BELINDA.

Deliver me! I am ruined. I hear my father's voice: what brings him hither? I am undone if he finds me. Let me retire into that room.

Sir JOHN.

That room will not do: you will be ſeen there.

BELINDA.

Can't I go up ſtairs? (going)

Sir JOHN.

No; I am ruined, if you go that way.—Hell and diſtraction!—My Lady Reſtleſs coming down! Here, Madam, here; into that chair. You will be concealed there: nobody will ſuſpect you.

BELINDA.

Any where, Sir: put me any where, to avoid this impending ſtorm. (goes into the chair)

Sir JOHN. (ſhutting the chair)

This is lucky. I am ſafe now. Let my Lady come as ſoon as ſhe will.

Enter Lady RESTLESS.

Lady RESTLESS.

I only wanted to ſay one word, Sir.

Enter

Enter BLANDFORD.

BLANDFORD.

Sir John, I am obliged to intrude: I am told my daughter is here.

Lady RESTLESS.

There! he has heard it all.

BLANDFORD.

I have heard that Belinda came to your houſe: on what buſineſs, I do not know. I hope, Sir John, that you do not harbour the girl to diſturb the peace and happineſs of a father.

Sir JOHN.

That imputation, Sir——

Lady RESTLESS.

He does harbour her.

Sir JOHN.

Mr. Blandford, I give you my honour——

Lady RESTLESS.

I know he does. He has ruined your daughter; he has injured you, Sir, as well as me in the moſt eſſential point.

Sir JOHN.

She raves; ſhe is mad. If you liſten to her——

Enter

Enter Sir WILLIAM, and BEVERLEY.

BLANDFORD.

I am glad you are come, Sir William. This more than I expected.

Sir JOHN.

And more than I expected. There, Madam, there is your favourite again!

BEVERLEY.

My viſit is public, Sir. I come to demand, in the preſence of this company, an explanation of the miſchief you have done me.

Sir JOHN.

You need not be ſo public, Sir. The cloſet is ready for you: Tattle will turn the key, and you will there be very ſafe.

Lady RESTLESS.

How can you perſiſt in ſuch a fallacy? He knows, he perfectly well knows it was an accident; a mere blunder of the ſervant, entirely unknown to me.

Sir JOHN.

She was privy to the whole.

BLANDFORD.

This is beſide my purpoſe. I came hither in queſt of my daughter: a father demands her. Is ſhe here? Is ſhe in the houſe.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

In this houſe, Sir? Our families never viſited. I am not acquainted with her.

Lady RESTLESS.

He is acquainted with her. I ſaw him claſp her in his arms.

BLANDFORD.

In his arms! When? Where? Tell me all.

Lady RESTLESS.

Yes, now let him give an account of himſelf.

Sir JOHN.

When you have accounted for your actions, Madam——

Lady RESTLESS.

Render an account to the lady's father, Sir.

BLANDFORD.

Yes, to her father. Account with me, Sir. When and where was all this?

Lady RESTLESS.

This very day; at noon; in the Park.

BEVERLEY.

But in the eyes of the whole world: I know Belinda: I can acquit her.

Sir

Sir JOHN.

And I proclaim her innocence. We can both acquit her. (goes up to Beverley)

Lady RESTLESS.

You are both in a plot: both combined.

Sir JOHN.

It was all harmleſs; all inoffenſive. Was not it Mr. Beverley?

BEVERLEY.

Yes, all, all.

Lady RESTLESS.

All guilt; manifeſt, downright guilt.

Sir WILLIAM.

If you all talk together, we ſhall never underſtand.

BEVERLEY.

I underſtand it all.—Mr. Blandford you met Belinda in the Park this morning?

BLANDFORD.

I did, Sir.

BEVERLEY.

You accoſted her violently: the harſhneſs of your language overpowered her ſpirits; ſhe was ready to faint: Sir John was paſſing by: ſhe was going to drop down: Sir John aſſiſted her: that is the whole of the ſtory. Injured as I am, I muſt do juſtice to Belinda's da's character. She may treat me with the caprice and pride of inſolent beauty; but her virtue claims reſpect.

Sir JOHN.

There now; there! that is the whole of the ſtory.

Lady RESTLESS.

The whole of the ſtory! no, Sir John: you ſhall ſuppreſs nothing: you could receive a picture from her.

Sir JOHN.

You, Madam, could receive a picture; and you, Mr. Beverley, could preſent it.

Lady RESTLESS.

Mr. Beverley, you hear this!

BEVERLEY.

I can juſtify you, Madam. I gave your Lady no picture, Sir John.

Sir JOHN.

She had it in her hand. I ſaw her print her kiſſes on it, and in that moment I ſeized it from her.

BEVERLEY.

Belinda dropt it in the Park, when ſhe was taken ill: I had juſt given it to her. Your Lady found it there.

Lady RESTLESS.

I found it on that very ſpot.

BEVERLEY.

There, Sir; ſhe found it.

Sir JOHN.

I found you locked up in her cabinet; concealed in private.

Lady RESTLESS.

But with no bad intent.

Sir JOHN.

With the worſt intent.

BEVERLEY.

Your jealouſy, Sir John, has fixed an imputation upon me, who have not deſerved it: and your ſuſpicions, Madam, have fallen, like a blaſting mildew, upon a lady, whoſe name was never before ſullied by the breath of calumny.

Sir WILLIAM.

The affair is clear as to your daughter, Mr. Blandford. I am ſatisfied, and now we need not intrude any longer upon this family. (Enter Bellmont and Clariſſa.) Walk in, George: every thing is right: your fears may now go to reſt.

Lady RESTLESS.

I ſhall not ſtay another night in this houſe. Time will explain every thing. Call my chairmen there. Sir John has it his own way at preſent. (Enter chairmen.) You have ſettled this among yourſelves. I ſhall now go to my brother's. Sir John I have no more to ſay at preſent. Hold up. (goes to the chair.)

Sir

Sir JOHN.

Let the chair alone. You ſhall not go: you ſhall not quit this houſe, till I conſent. (goes between her and the chair.)

Lady RESTLESS.

I ſay hold up.

Sir JOHN.

Let it alone.

Lady RESTLESS.

Very well, Sir: I muſt be your priſoner, muſt I?

Sir JOHN.

It is mine to command here. No looſe eſcapes this night; no aſſignations; no intrigues to diſgrace me.

Lady RESTLESS.

Such inhuman treatment! I am glad there are witneſſes of your behaviour. (walks away)

BLANDFORD.

I am ſorry to ſee all this confuſion; but ſince my daughter is not here——

Lady RESTLESS.

He knows where ſhe is, and ſo you will find.

Sir JOHN. (coming forward.)

Your daughter is innocent, Sir, I give you my honour. Where ſhould ſhe be in this houſe? Lady Reſtleſs has occaſioned all this miſchief. She formed a ſtory to palliate her own miſconduct. To her various artifices you are a ſtranger; but in a few days you may depend——

Lady RESTLESS. (aſide, as ſhe goes towards the chair.) He ſhall find that I am not to be detained here. (makes ſigns to the chairmen to hold up.)

Sir JOHN.

I ſay, gentlemen, you may depend that I have full proof, and in a little time every thing will—(the chair is opened, and Belinda comes out.)

Lady RESTLESS.

Who has proof now? There, there! in his houſe all the time!

BLANDFORD.

What do I ſee?

BEVERLEY.

Belinda here!

Sir WILLIAM.

So, ſo! there is ſomething in it, I ſee.

Sir JOHN.

Diſtraction! this is unlucky.

Lady RESTLESS.

What ſay you now, Mr. Beverley?—Now Mr. Blandford! there; ocular demonſtration for you!

Sir WILLIAM.

George, take Clariſſa as ſoon as you will. Mr. Blandford, you will excuſe me, if I now decline any further treaty with you.

BLANDFORD.

This abrupt behaviour, Sir William——

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

I am ſatisfied Sir. I am reſolved. Clariſſa, you have my approbation: my ſon is at your ſervice. Here, George, take her, and be happy.

BELLMONT. (taking her hand)

To you from this moment I dedicate all my future days.

BLANDFORD.

Very well: take your own way. I can ſtill protect my daughter.

BEVERLEY.

And ſhe deſerves your protection: my dear Belinda explain all this: I know it is in your power.

BELINDA.

This generous behaviour, Sir, recalls me to new life. You, I am now convinced, have been accuſed by my Lady Reſtleſs without foundation. Whatever turn her Ladyſhip's unhappy ſelf-tormenting fancy may give to my conduct, it may provoke a ſmile, but will excite no other paſſion.

Lady RESTLESS.

Mighty fine! what brought you to this houſe?

BELINDA.

To be a witneſs of your folly, Madam, and Sir John's into the bargain.

BELLMONT.

That I can vouch: Sir John can fill his mind with vain chimæras, with as apt a diſpoſition as his Lady. Beverley has been repreſented in the falſeſt colours—

Lady RESTLESS.

That I admit: Sir John invented the ſtory.

BEVERLEY.

And Belinda, Madam, has been cruelly ſlandered by you.

Sir JOHN.

She has ſo: that I admit.

BELINDA.

And my deſire to ſee all this cleared up, brought me to this houſe, Madam. Now you ſee what has made this confuſion.

Lady RESTLESS.

Oh! I expected theſe airs. You may diſcuſs the point where you pleaſe: I will hear no more upon the ſubject. [Exit.

BLANDFORD.

Madam, the ſubject muſt be ſettled. (follows her.)

Sir JOHN.

You have a right to inſiſt upon it: The whole ſhall be explained this moment. Sir William, you are a diſpaſſionate man. Give us your aſſiſtance. [Exit.

Sir WILLIAM.

With all my heart. George, you are no longer concerned in this buſineſs, and I am glad of it.

[Exit, with young Bellmont.

CLA-

CLARISSA. (to Beverley.)

Now Brother, now is your time: your difficulties are all removed. Sir John ſuſpected you without reaſon: my Lady Reſtleſs did the ſame to Belinda: you are both in love, and now may do each other juſtice. I can ſatisfy my Lady Reſtleſs and your father.

[Exit.

BEVERLEY. (aſide)

I ſee, I ſee my raſhneſs.

BELINDA. (aſide)

I have been terribly deceived.

BEVERLEY.

If ſhe would but forgive my folly.

BELINDA.

Why does not he open his mind to me? I can' ſpeak firſt.

BEVERLEY.

What apology can I make her?—Belinda!

BELINDA.

Charming! he begins. (aſide, and ſmiling)

BEVERLEY. (approaching)

Belinda!—no anſwer?—Belinda!

BELINDA.

Mr. Beverley!—(ſmiles aſide)

BEVERLEY.

Don't you think you have been very cruel to me, Belinda? (advancing towards her)

BELINDA.

Don't you think you have been barbarous to me? (without looking at him)

BEVERLEY.

I have: I grant it. Can you find in your heart to forgive me?

BELINDA. (without looking at him)

You have kept me on the rack this whole day, and can you wonder that I feel myſelf unhappy?

BEVERLEY.

I am to blame: I acknowledge it. If you knew how my own heart reproaches me, you would ſpare yourſelf the trouble. With tears in my eyes I now ſpeak to you: I acknowledge all my errors.

BELINDA. (looking at him)

Thoſe are not tears, Mr. Beverley. (ſmiling)

BEVERLEY.

They are; you ſee that they are.

BELINDA.

Ah! you men can command tears.

BEVERLEY.

My life! my angel! (kiſſes her hand) Do you forgive me?

BELINDA.

No; I hate you. (looking pleaſed at him)

BEVERLEY.

Now, I don't believe that. (kiſſes her cheek) Do you hate me, Belinda?

BELINDA.

How could you let an extravagance of temper get the better of you? You know the ſincerity of my affection. Oh, Mr. Beverley! was it not ungenerous?

BEVERLEY.

It was; I own it; on my knees I own it.

BELINDA. (laughing)

Oh! proud man! have I humbled you?—Since you ſubmit to my will and pleaſure, I think I can forgive you.—Beg my picture back this moment.

(ſhews it to him)

BEVERLEY. (taking the picture)

I ſhall adore it ever, and heal this breach with uninterrupted love.

Enter

Enter Sir JOHN, Lady RESTLESS, Sir WILLIAM, BLANDORD, BELLMONT and CLARISSA.

Sir JOHN. (laughing)

Why yes; it is very clear. I can now laugh at my own folly, and my wife's too.

Lady RESTLESS.

There has been ſomething of a miſtake, I believe.

BEVERLEY.

You ſee, Sir John, what your ſuſpicions are come to. I never was within your doors before this day; nor ſhould I, perhaps, have had the honour of ſpeaking to your Lady, had it not been for the miſunderſtanding your mutual jealouſies occaſioned between Belinda and me.

BLANDFORD.

And your Ladyſhip has been ingenious enough to work out of thoſe whimſical circumſtances a charge againſt my daughter. Ha! ha!

Sir JOHN.

It is ever her way, Sir. I told you, my dear, that you would make yourſelf very ridiculous.

Lady RESTLESS.

I fancy, Sir, you have not been behind hand with me. Ha! ha! ha!

Sir WILLIAM.

And now, Mr. Blandford, I think we may as well let the match go on as we at firſt intended.

BLAND-

BLANDFORD.

No, no more of that: you have diſpoſed of your ſon. Belinda, I no longer oppoſe your inclinations; take Mr. Beverley as ſoon as you will.

Sir JOHN.

Now let us ſee: if ſhe agrees to marry him, why then, ſhe knows he is innocent, and I ſhall be ſatisfied. (aſide)

BELINDA.

If you inſiſt upon it, Sir.

BLANDFORD.

I do inſiſt.

Lady RESTLESS.

If Beverley accepts of her, all my ſuſpicions are at an end. (aſide)

BEVERLEY.

Thus let me take the bright reward of all my wiſhes. (takes her hand)

BELINDA.

Since it is over, you have uſed your authority, Sir, to make me happy indeed. We have both ſeen our error, and frankly confeſs that we have been in the wrong too.

Sir WILLIAM.

Why, we have been all in the wrong, I think.

Sir JOHN.

It has been a day of miſtakes, but of fortunate ones, conducing at laſt to the advantage of all parties. My Lady Reſtleſs will now be taught——

Lady

Lady RESTLESS.

Sir John, I hope you will be taught——

BLANDFORD.

Never mention what is paſt. The wrangling of married people about unlucky queſtions that break out between them, is like the laſhing of a top; it only ſerves to keep it up the longer.

Sir JOHN.

Very true: and ſince we have been ALL IN THE WRONG TO-DAY, we will, for the future, endeavour to be ALL IN THE RIGHT.

BEVERLEY.

A fair propoſal, Sir John: we will make it our buſineſs, both you, who are married, and we, who are now entering into that ſtate, by mutual confidence to enſure mutual happineſs.

The God of Love, thinks we profane his fire,
When trifles light as air miſtruſt inſpire.
But where eſteem and gen'rous paſſions ſpring,
There reigns ſecure, and waves his purple wing;
Gives home-felt peace; prevents the nuptial ſtrife;
Endears the bliſs, and bids it laſt for life.

FINIS.

EPI-

EPILOGUE.

Written by Mr. GARRICK.

Spoken by Mrs. YATES.

BLESS me, this ſummer work is ſo fatiguing!
And then our plays ſo buſtling, ſo intriguing!
Such miffing, ſighing, ſcolding, all together!
Theſe love affairs ſuit beſt with colder weather.
At this warm time theſe writers ſhou'd not treat you,
With ſo much love, and paſſion,—for they'll heat you:
Poets, like Weavers, ſhould with taſte and reaſon,
Adapt their various goods to ev'ry ſeaſon.
For the hot months, the fanciful, and ſlight;
For mind, and body, ſomething cool and light:
Authors themſelves indeed neglect this rule;
Dreſs warm in ſummer, and at Chriſtmas cool.
I told our Bard within, theſe five act plays,
Are rich brocades, unfit for ſultry days.
Were you a cook, ſaid I, wou'd you prepare,
Large hams, and roaſted ſirloins for your fare?
Their very ſmoke would pall a city glutton;
A Tragedy would make you all unbutton!
Both appetites now aſk for daintier picking,
Farce, pantomime, cold lamb, or white-leg'd chicken.
At Ranelagh fine rolls and butter ſee:
Signor Tenducci, and the beſt green tea!
Italian ſinging is as light as feather;
Beard is too loud, too powerful for this weather!
Vauxhall more ſolidly regales your palates;
Champaigne, cantata's, cold boil'd beef, and ballads.
What ſhall we do your different taſtes to hit?
You reliſh ſatire; [to the pit] you ragouts of wit;
[boxes]
Your

Your taſte is humour, and high ſeaſon'd joke; [1ſt gall.]
You call for hornpipes, and for Hearts of Oak! [2d gall.]
O could I wiſh and have!—A conjuring man
Once told my fortune,—and he charm'd this fan!
Said with a flirt I might my will enjoy:
Think you there's magic in this little toy?
I'll try its pow'r; and, if I gain my wiſh,
I'll give you, Sirs, a downright Engliſh diſh.
Come then; a ſong [muſic is heard] indeed! I ſee 'twill do.
Take heed gallants, I'll play the deuce with you.
Whene'er I pleaſe, I'll charm you to my ſight;
And tear a FAN WITH FLIRTING ev'ry night.

Enter two BALLAD SINGERS, who ſing the following Song.

SONG.

YE Critics above, and ye Critics below,
Ye finer ſpun Critics, who keep the mid row,
O tarry a moment, I'll ſing you a ſong,
Shall prove that, like us, you are all in the wrong.

Ye Poets, who mount on the fam'd winged ſteed,
Of prancing, and wincing, and kicking take heed:
For when by thoſe hornets, the Critics, you're ſtung,
You're thrown in the dirt, and are all in the wrong.

Ye Actors, who act what theſe writers have writ,
Pray ſtick to your Poet, and ſpare your own wit;
For when with your own you unbridle your tongue,
I'll hold ten to one you are all in the wrong.

Ye Knaves, who make news for the fooliſh to read,
Who print daily ſlanders the hungry to feed:
For a while you miſlead 'em, the news hunting throng,
Till the pillory proves, you are all in the wrong.

Ye

Ye grave Politicians, ſo deep and ſo wiſe,
With your hums, and your ſhrugs, and your uplifted eyes;
The road that you travel, is tedious and long,
But I pray you jog on; you are all in the wrong.

Ye happy fond huſbands, and fond happy wives,
Let never ſuſpicion embitter your lives;
Let your prudence be ſtout, and your faith be as ſtrong;
Who watch, or who catch, they are all in the wrong.

Ye unmarried folks be not bought, or be ſold,
Let age avoid youth, and the young ones the old;
For they'll ſoon get together, the young with the young,
And then my wiſe old ones, you're all in the wrong.

Ye ſoldiers and ſailors, who bravely have fought,
Who honour and glory, and laurels have bought;
Let your foes but appear, you'll be at 'em ding dong,
And if they come near you, they're all in the wrong.

Ye judges of taſte to our labours be kind,
Our errors are many, pray wink, or be blind;
Still find your way hither to glad us each night,
And our note we will change to you're all in the right.

THE DESERT ISLAND,

A

DRAMATIC POEM,

IN THREE ACTS.

Performed at the

THEATRE ROYAL

IN

DRURY-LANE.

Te, dulcis conjux, te ſolo in littore ſecum,
Te veniente die, te decedente canebat.

PROLOGUE.

Written and ſpoken by Mr. GARRICK,

In the Character of a DRUNKEN POET.

ALL, all ſhall out; all that I know and feel;
I will by Heav'n to higher powers appeal!
Behold a Bard! no Author of to-night!
No, no, they can't ſay that, with all their ſpite:
Ay, you may frown (looking behind the ſcenes) I'm at you, great and ſmall;
Your Poet, Players, Managers and all!
Theſe fools within here, ſwear that I'm in liquor:
My paſſion warms me, makes my utt'rance thicker:
I totter too; but that's the gout and pain:
French wines, and living high, have been my bane.
From all temptations now, I wiſely ſteer me;
Nor will I ſuffer one fine woman near me.
And this I ſacrifice, to give you pleaſure:
For you I've coin'd my brains, and here's the treaſure.
(pulls out a Manuſcript)
A treaſure this, of profit and delight!
And all thrown by for this damn'd ſtuff to-night!
This is a play would water ev'ry eye!
If I but look upon't, it makes me cry.
This play would tears from blood-ſtain'd ſoldiers draw,
And melt the bowels of hard-hearted law!
Would fore and aft the ſtorm-proof ſailor rake;
Keep turtle-eating Aldermen awake!

Would the cold blood of ancient maidens thrill,
And make ev'n pretty younger tongues lie ſtill,
This play not ev'n Managers would refuſe,
Had Heav'n but giv'n 'em any brains to chuſe!
(puts up his Manuſcript)
Your Bard to-night, bred in the ancient ſchool,
Deſigns and meaſures all by critic rule;
'Mongſt friends it goes no farther—He's a fool.
So very claſſic, and ſo very dull,
His Deſert Iſland is his own dear ſkull.
No ſoul to make the Playhouſe ring, and rattle,
No trumpets, thunder, ranting, ſtorms, or battle!
But all your fine poetic prittle prattle.
The plot is this—A lady's caſt away;
"Long before the beginning of the play;"
And they are taken by a fiſherman,
The lady and the child—'tis Bays's plan:
So on he blunders—He's an Iriſhman.
'Tis all alike; his comic ſtuff I mean:
I hate all humour; it gives me the ſpleen;
So damn 'em both, with all my heart, unſight, unſeen. *
But ſhould you ruin him, ſtill I'm undone:
I've try'd all ways to bring my Phœnix on.
(ſhewing his play again)
Flatter I can with any of their tribe;
Can cut and ſlaſh; indeed I cannot bribe.
What muſt I do then?—Beg you to ſubſcribe.

* The Way to Keep Him, in three acts, was preſented as the after piece on the ſame night.

Be

Be kind ye boxes, galleries, and pit:
'Tis but a crown a-piece for all this wit:
All ſterling wit! to puff myſelf I hate:
You'll ne'er ſupply your wants at ſuch a rate!
'Tis worth your money, I would ſcorn to wrong ye:
You ſmile conſent; I'll ſend my hat among ye.

(going, he returns)

So much beyond all praiſe your bounties ſwell!
Not my own tongue, my gra-ti-tude can tell.
"A little flattery ſometimes does well."

(ſtaggers off)

Dramatis Perſonæ.

MEN.

FERDINAND, Huſband to CONSTANTIA,	Mr. HOLLAND.
HENRICO, Friend to FERDINAND,	Mr. FLEETWOOD.

WOMEN.

CONSTANTIA,	Mrs. PRITCHARD.
SYLVIA, her Daughter,	Miſs PRITCHARD.

SCENE, A Deſert Iſland.

THE DESERT ISLAND.

ACT the FIRST.

The ſcene repreſents a vale in the Deſert Iſland, ſurrounded by rocks, caverns, grottos, flowering ſhrubs, exotic trees, and plants growing wild. On one ſide is a cavern in a rock, over the entrance of which appears, in large characters, an unfiniſhed inſcription. CONSTANTIA is diſcovered at work at the inſcription, in a romantic habit of ſkins, leaves, and flowers: in her hand ſhe holds a broken ſword, and ſtands in act to finiſh the imperfect inſcription.

After a ſhort pauſe, ſhe begins.

REST; reſt my arm; ye weary ſinews, reſt:
Awhile forget your office. On this rock
Here ſit thee down, and think thyſelf to ſtone.
(ſits down)
Would Heav'n I could! (riſes) Ye ſhrubs, ye nameleſs plants,
That, wildly-gadding, 'midſt the rifted rocks
Wreathe your fantaſtic ſhoots; ye darkſome trees,
That ſpread yon verdant arch above my head,
Shadowing this ſolemn ſcene; ye moſs-grown caves,
Romantic grottos,—all ye objects drear!
Tell me, in pity tell me, have ye ſeen,
Thro' the long ſeries of revolving time,
In which you have inclos'd this lonely manſion,
Say, have ye ſeen another wretch like me?
No, never! You, in tendereſt ſympathy,

Have join'd my plaints: you, at the midnight hour,
When with uprooted hair I've ſtrew'd the earth,
And call'd my huſband gone; have call'd in vain
Perfidious Ferdinand! you, at that hour,
Have waken'd echo in each vocal cell,
Till ev'ry grove, and ev'ry green hill round,
Mourn'd to my griefs reſponſive. Well you know
The ſtory of my woes: ev'n yonder marble
Relenting feels the touch; receives each trace
That forms the melancholy tale.—Tho' rude,
And inexpert my hand; tho' all uncouth
The inſtrument, yet there behold my work
Well nigh complete. Let me about it ſtraight.
(ſhe advances toward the rock)
Ye deep engraven letters, there remain;
And if in future time reſiſtleſs fate
Shall throw ſome Briton on this diſmal ſhore;
Then ſpeak aloud; to his aſtoniſh'd ſenſe
Relate my ſad, my memorable caſe:
Alarm his ſoul, call out——

STOP TRAVELLER.
HERE
CONSTANTIA,
WITH HER LITTLE INFANT,
SYLVIA,
WAS DESERTED BY HER HUSBAND,
THE PERFIDIOUS
FERDINAND;
WHO PRETENDING TO LAND HER
FOR REFRESHMENT
FROM THE DANGERS OF A STORMY SEA,
BARBAROUSLY LEFT HER
ON THIS UNHOSPITABLE ISLAND,
WHERE SHE ENDED HER DEPLORABLE LIFE.

FRIEND!

FRIEND!
WHOE'ER THOU ART,
PITY MY WRONGS,
BUT AGAINST MY HUSBAND,
(FOR LOVE LIKE MINE CANNOT FORGET
WHERE ONCE WITH DELIGHT IT FIXED)
I CHARGE YOU NEVER MEDITATE R———
Revenge!—the word Revenge is wanting ſtill.
Ye holy pow'rs! if with one pitying look
You'll deign to view me, grant my earneſt pray'r!
Let me but finiſh this my ſad inſcription,
Then let this buſy, this afflicted heart
Be ſtill at once, and beat my breaſt no more.
(ſhe goes on with her work)

Enter SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

My deareſt mother! Oh! quite out of breath.

CONSTANTIA.

What is the matter, child?

SYLVIA.

My flutt'ring heart
Beats wild with joy. Oh! ſuch an incident!

CONSTANTIA.

What incident, my ſweet?

SYLVIA.

My little fawn,
My dear, my loveliеſt fawn, for many days

Whoſe

Whoſe loſs I've mourn'd; for whoſe dear ſake I've left
No corner of the Iſle unſearch'd; this moment,
O'er the dew-ſpangled lawn, with printleſs feet,
Came bounding to me; playful friſk'd about
With inexpreſſive airs of glad ſurprize,
With eager ſighs of tranſport: big round tears
Stood trembling in his eye, and ſeem'd to ſpeak
His fond regret ſtill mingling with his joy.

CONSTANTIA.

And is it that, my love, delights thee ſo?

SYLVIA.

And can you wonder, Ma'am? Yes, that delights me,
Tranſports me, charms me: he's my darling care,
My dear companion, my ſweet little friend,
That loves me, gambols round me, watches ſtill
With anxious tenderneſs my ev'ry motion,
Pants on my boſom, leaps into my arms,
And wanders o'er me with a thouſand kiſſes.
Before this time, he never once ſtray'd from me:
I thought I loſt him; but he's found again!
And can you wonder I'm tranſported thus?

CONSTANTIA.

Oh! happy ſtate of innocence! how ſweet
Thy joys, ſimplicity, e'er yet the mind
With artificial paſſions learns to glow;
Ere taſte has ta'en our ſenſes to her ſchool,
Has given each well-bred appetite her laws,
Taught us to feel imaginary bliſs,
Or elſe expire in elegance of pain.

SYLVIA,

SYLVIA.

Nay, now, again, you're growing grave: 'tis you
Give laws to appetite; forbid each ſenſe
To miniſter delight. Your eyes are dimm'd
With conſtant tears; the roſes on your cheek
Fade like yon violets, when exceſſive dews
Have bent their drooping, melancholy heads.
Soon they repair their graces; ſoon recal
Their aromatic lives, and ſmiling yield
To ſighing Zephyr all their balmy ſweets.
To grief you're ſtill a prey: ſtill wan deſpair
Sits with'ring at your heart, and ev'ry feature
Has your directions to be fixed in woe.
Nay, pr'ythee dry thoſe tears: you make me ſad.
Will you, at length, forget your cares?

CONSTANTIA.

Forget!
Oh! ſweet oblivion, thy all healing balm
To wretches you refuſe! Can I forget
Perfidious Ferdinand? His tyrant form
Is ever preſent: the deluding looks,
Endearing accents, and the ſoft regards
With which he led me to yon moſs-clad cave,
There to repoſe awhile. Oh! cruel man!
And you, ye conſcious wilds, I call you falſe!
Accomplices in guilt! The Zephyrs bland
That pant upon each leaf; the melody
That warbles thro' your groves; the falling fountains,
That at each deep'ning cadence lull the mind,
Were all ſuborn'd againſt me; all conſpir'd
To wrap me in the ſilken folds of ſleep.
Sudden I wake: where, where is Ferdinand?
I rave, I ſhriek; no Ferdinand replies;

Frantic

Frantic I rove thro' all your winding glades:
I ſeek the ſhore, no Ferdinand appears!
I climb yon craggy ſteeps; I ſee the ſhip
Unfurling all her ſails! I call aloud,
I ſtamp, cry out; deaf as the roaring ſea
He catches ev'ry gale that blows from Heav'n,
And cleaves his liquid way.

SYLVIA.

Why will you thus
Recall your paſt afflictions?

CONSTANTIA.

Ah! what then,
Thou wretched Conſtance, what were then thy feelings?
I rend my treſſes, beat my breaſt in vain,
In vain ſtretch out theſe ineffectual arms;
Pierce with my frantic cries the wounded air;
Daſh my bare boſom on the flinty rock,
Then riſe again, and ſtrain my aching ſight,
To ſee the ſhip ſtill leſs'ning to my view,
And take the laſt, laſt glimpſe, as far, far off,
In the horizon's verge ſhe leſſens ſtill,
Grows a dim ſpeck, and mixes with the clouds
Juſt vaniſhing, juſt loſt,—ah! ſeen no more.

SYLVIA.

I pr'ythee don't talk ſo: my heart dies in me.
Why won't you ſtrive a little to forget
This melancholy theme? The twilight grey
Of morn but faintly ſtreaks the eaſt; the ſtars
Still glimmer thro' the whit'ning air; the groves
Are mute; yon all-devouring deep lies huſh'd;
The tuneful birds, and the whole brute creation
Still ſink in ſoft oblivious ſlumber wrapp'd,

For-

Forgetful of their cares. All, all but you
Know ſome repoſe: you paſs the dreary night
In tears and ceaſeleſs grief; then riſing wild
Anticipate the dawn, and here reſume
Your doleful taſk, or elſe aſcend the height
Of yonder promontory; there forlorn
You ſit, and hear the brawling waves beneath
Laſh the reſounding ſhore; your brimful eye
Still fix'd on that ſad quarter of the heav'ns
Where my hard father diſappear'd.

CONSTANTIA.

Yes, there
My melancholy loves to dwell; there loves
To ſit, and pine over its hoard of grief;
To roll theſe eyes o'er all the ſullen main,
In hopes ſome ſail may this way ſhape its courſe
With the glad tidings of the human race!
Could I behold that dear, that wiſh'd for ſight,
Could I but ſee ſome veſtiges of man,
Some mark of ſocial life, ev'n tho' the ſhip
Should ſhun this iſle, and court propitious gales
Beneath ſome happier clime; yet ſtill the view
Would chear my ſoul, and my heart bound with joy
At that faint proſpect of my fellow creatures.
But not for me, ſuch tranſport; not for me!
Dear native land, I now no more muſt ſee thee,
Condemn'd in ever-during ſolitude to mourn,
From thy ſweet joys, ſociety, debarr'd!

SYLVIA.

But to your happineſs what's wanting here?
Full many a time I've heard you praiſe the arts,
The poliſh'd manners, and gay ſcenes of bliſs
Which Europe yields: yet ever and anon
I from your own diſcourſe can gather too

That

That happineſs is all unknown to Europe:
That envy there can dwell, and diſcontent;
The ſmile, that wakens at another's woe;
The heart, that ſickens at another's praiſe;
The tongue, that carries the malignant tale;
The little ſpirit, that ſubverts a friend:
Fraud, perfidy, ingratitude, and murder.
Now ſure with reaſon I prefer theſe ſcenes
Of innocence, tranquility, and joy!

CONSTANTIA.

Alas! my child, 'tis eaſy to forego
Untaſted ſweets, pleaſures you never knew.

SYLVIA.

Are we not here what you yourſelf have told me
In Europe ſovereigns are? Here we have fix'd
Our little ſylvan reign. The guileleſs race
Of animals, that roam the lawns and woods,
Are tractable and willing ſubjects; pay
Paſſive obedience to us; and yon ſea
Becomes our tributary; hither rolls
In each hoarſe-murm'ring tide his various ſtores
Of daintieſt ſhell-fiſh. The unbidden earth,
Of human toil all ignorant, pours forth
Whatever to the eye, or taſte, can prove
Rare, exquiſite, and good. At once the ſpring
Calls forth its green delights, and ſummer's bluſh
Glows on each purple branch. The ſeaſons here

On the ſame tree, with glad ſurprize,
Behold each other's gifts ariſe:
Spontaneous fruits around us grow;
For ever here the Zephyrs blow:
Shrubs ever flow'ring,
Shades embow'ring;

Heav'nly

Heav'nly ſpots,
Cooling grots,
Verdant mountains,
Falling fountains;
Pure limpid rills,
Adown the hills,
That wind their way,
And o'er the meadows play,
Enamour'd of th' enchanted ground,

CONSTANTIA.

What is this waſte of beauty, all theſe charms
Of cold, inanimate, unconſcious nature,
Without the ſocial ſenſe?

SYLVIA.

Thoſe beauteous tracts
Which you ſo much regret, are full of men;
And men, you know, are animals of prey:
I'm ſure that you yourſelf have told me ſo
A thouſand times.

CONSTANTIA.

And if I have, my child,
I told a diſmal truth. Oh! they are falſe,
Inexorable, cruel, fell deceivers:
Their unrelenting hearts no harbour know
For honour, truth, humanity, or love.

SYLVIA.

Well then, in this lone iſle, this dear retreat
From them at leaſt we're free.

CONSTANTIA.

Poor innocent!
I can't but grieve for her. (burſts into tears)

SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

Why fall afreſh
Thoſe drops of ſorrow? Pray you, now give o'er.

CONSTANTIA.

My heart will break. I do not grieve, my child.
I can't conceal my tears: they will have way.

SYLVIA.

Nay, if you love me, ſure you will not thus
Make my heart ake within me!

CONSTANTIA.

No, my ſweet;
I will not weep. All will be well, my love.
Oh! miſery! I can't, I can't contain.
The black ingratitude! (weeps)

SYLVIA.

Say, is there aught
Sylvia can do, that may afford you comfort?
If there is, tell me. Shall I fetch my fawn?
Dry up your tears, and he is your's this moment.

CONSTANTIA.

No, Sylvia, no!

SYLVIA.

He muſt, he ſhall be your's.
Refuſe me not. I'll run and bring him to you.
[Exit.

CON-

CONSTANTIA. (alone)

Alas! I fear my brain will turn—the ſun
Full ſixteen times has made his annual courſe,
Since here I've dragg'd a miſerable being,
The victim of deſpair; which long e'er now,
To phrenzy kindling, muſt have forc'd me daſh
My brain in madneſs on yon flinty rocks,
And end my pangs at once; if the keen inſtinct
Of ſtrong maternal love had not reſtrain'd
My wild diſorder'd ſoul, and bade me live
To watch her tender infancy; to rear
Her blooming years; with fond delighted care
To tend each bloſſom of her growing mind,
And ſee light gradual dawning on her ſoul.
And yet to ſee her thus, to ſee her here,
Cut off from ev'ry ſocial bliſs; condemn'd,
Like ſome fair flow'r that in a deſart blows,
To breath its ſweets into the paſſing wind,
And waſte its bloom all unperceiv'd away!
It is enough to break a mother's heart.
Let me not think on't; let me ſhun that thought.
(ſits down, and ſings)

I.

What tho' his guilt my heart hath torn,
Yet lovely is his mien;
His eyes mild-op'ning as the morn,
Round him each grace is ſeen.
But oh! ye nymphs, your loves ne'er let him win,
For oh! deceit and falſehood dwell within.

II.

From his red lips his accents ſtole,
Soft as kind vernal ſnows;
Melting they came, and in the ſoul
Deſire and joy aroſe.

But oh! ye nymphs, ne'er liſten to his art,
For oh! baſe falſehood rankles in his heart.

III.

He left me in this lonely ſtate!
He fled, and left me here,
Another Ariadne's fate,
To mourn the live-long year.
He fled; but oh! what pains the heart muſt prove,
When we reveal the crimes of him we love!

Re-enter SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

I cannot bring him now: in yonder ſtream,
That through its pebbled channel glides along,
Soft murm'ring to the ſea, he ſtands to cool
His beauteous form in the pure limpid rill.

CONSTANTIA.

To thee he cauſes joy; but joy to me
There's nothing now can bring. Left by my huſband!
By the falſe, barb'rous man!

SYLVIA.

And yet this man,
This falſe, deceitful man, you ſtill regret.
I vow, I can't but think, 'midſt all your grief,
All your reproaches, your complaints againſt him,
That ſtill this falſe, this cruel, fell deceiver,
Has found,—I know not why—within your breaſt
Some tender advocate, to plead his cauſe.

CON-

CONSTANTIA.

No, Sylvia, no; my love is turn'd to hate.

SYLVIA.

Then dry your ſorrows, and this day begin
A happier train of years. And lo! the ſun
Emerges from the ſea: he lifts his orb
Above the purpled main, and ſtreams abroad
His golden fluid o'er the world. The birds
Exulting wake their notes; all things rejoice,
And hills, and groves, and rocks, and vallies ſmile,
Let me entreat you then forget your cares,
And ſhare the general bliſs.

(The ſun is ſeen to riſe at a diſtance, as it were out of the ſea)

CONSTANTIA.

Once more all hail,
Thou radiant power, who in your bright career,
Or riſing or deſcending, haſt beheld
My never-ceaſing woe! Again thou climb'ſt
In orient glory, and recall'ſt the cares,
And toils of man and beaſt! But oh! in all
Your flaming courſe, your beams will never ligh
Upon a wretch ſo loſt, ſo curſt as I am.

SYLVIA.

And yet, my mother——

CONSTANTIA.

Mine are pangs, my child,
Strokes of adverſity no time can cure,
No lenient arts can ſoften or aſſuage.
But I'll not grieve thee, Sylvia; I'll retire

To ſome ſequeſter'd haunt: there, all forlorn,
I'll ſit, and wear myſelf away in thought. [Exit.

SYLVIA. (alone)

Alas! how obſtinately bent on grief
Is her whole mind! the votariſt of care!
In vain I try to ſoften her afflictions,
And with each art beguile her from her woe.
I chide, intreat, careſs, yet all in vain.
And what to me ſeems ſtrange, perverſe, and wond'rous,
The more I ſtrive, the more her ſorrows ſwell;
Her tears the faſter fall, fall down her cheek
In ſtreams ſo copious, and ſuch bitter anguiſh,
That I myſelf at length, I know not how,
Catch the ſoft weakneſs, and o'erpow'r'd with grief,
Flow all diſſolving in unbidden tears.
Aſſiſt her Heav'n! her heart will break at laſt.
I tremble at the thought. I'll follow ſtraight,
And ſtill implore, beſeech, try ev'ry way
To reconcile her to herſelf and me.
But ſee, look yonder! what a ſight is there!
What can it mean, that huge, enormous maſs,
That moves upon the boſom of the deep!
A floating mountain!—No: a mountain never Could change its place. For ſuch a monſtrous bulk
How light it urges on its way! how quick,
How rapid in its courſe! What can it be?
I'll to the ſhore, and from the pointed rock
That juts into the waves, at leiſure view
This wond'rous ſight, and what it is explore.

End of the FIRST ACT.

ACT

ACT the SECOND.

SCENE, Another view of the Iſland, with an opening to the ſea between ſeveral hills and rocks.

Enter SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

STILL I behold it; ſtill it glides along
Thro' the tumultuous ſea. And lo! before it
The waves divide! and now they cloſe again,
Leaving a tract of angry foam behind.
It muſt be, ſure, ſome monſter of the deep.
And ſee! upon its huge broad back it bears
Expanded wings, that, ſpreading to the wind,
Lie broad incumbent o'er the ſurge beneath.
Ah! ſave me, ſave me! what new forms appear!
What ſhapes of unknown being riſe before me!
From yon huge monſter's ſide they iſſue forth,
And bolt upon the ſhore!—behold, they ſtop,
And now with eager, diſconcerted pace,
Precipitate ruſh forward on the iſle!
Now 'mongſt the rocks they wind their ſilent way.
Protect me, Heav'n! defend me! ſhield me!—ah!
Hide me, ye woods, within your deep receſs;
Ne'er may theſe monſters penetrate your haunts;
Ne'er trace my footſteps thro' your darkſome ways.
Behind the covert of this woodbine bow'r
Oh! let me reſt conceal'd! (ſhe retires)

Enter FERDINAND and HENRICO.

HENRICO.

No trace appears,
No veſtige here is ſeen of human kind.
'Tis drear, 'tis waſte, and unfrequented all.
And hark!—what noiſe!—from yonder toiling deep
How dreadful ſounds the pealing roar!—My friend,
My valued Ferdinand, 'twere beſt retire.
This cannot be the place.

FERDINAND.

Oh! my Henrico,
This is the fatal ſhore. The well-known ſcene;
Yon bay, yon rocks, yon mountains, from whoſe brow
Th' imbow'ring foreſt overhangs the deep;
Each well-remember'd object ſtrikes my view,
Anſwers the image in my mind preſerv'd,
Engraven there by love's recording hand,
And never, but with life, to fade from thence.

HENRICO.

And yet thy love-enfeebled ſoul may form
Imaginary tokens of reſemblance.
The ſoil unbeaten ſeems by mortal ſtep.

FERDINAND.

My heart in ev'ry pulſe confirms it to me.
This is the place, the dreary ſpot, where fate
Began to weave the tiſſue of my woes.
Oh! I was curſt, abhorr'd of Heav'n, or elſe
I ne'er had truſted the contentious waves,
But kept my ſtore of happineſs at home.

HEN-

HENRICO.

Repine not for an action that aroſe,
From filial piety. A father's mandate
Requir'd obedience from you.

FERDINAND.

To his ſummons
I paid a glad attention. Yet, good Heav'n!
Why in that early period of my bliſs
Should then his orders come, to daſh my joys?
Oh! I was bleſt with all that rareſt beauty,
With all that ev'ry Venus of the mind,
The tender heart, and the enliven'd wit
Could pour delightful on the raptur'd ſenſe
Of the young bridegroom, whoſe admiring eyes
Still hung enamour'd on her ev'ry charm,
And thence drank long inſpiring draughts of love,
Unſated ſtill, ſtill kindling at the view.

HENRICO.

Indeed, my Ferdinand, thy fate was hard!

FERDINAND.

Each ſoft deſire, each joy refin'd was mine,
The hours ſoft glided by, and as they paſs'd
Scatter'd new bleſſings from their balmy wings;
They ſaw our ever-new delight; they ſaw
A blooming offspring crown our mutual loves;
The mother's features, and her ev'ry grace
In this our daughter exquiſitely trac'd.
But to be torn from that ſupreme of bliſs!
My wife, Conſtantia,—and my beateous babe,
Here to be left on this untravell'd iſle,
To pine in bitterneſs of want! their bed
The cold bare earth, while the inclement winds

From yonder main came howling round their heads,
Until at length the friendly hand of Death
In pity threw his ſhrowd upon their woes.

HENRICO.

Too ſure, I fear, they're loſt.

FERDINAND.

Perhaps, my friend,
Perhaps, when gaſping in the pangs of death,
When ev'ry beauty faded from her cheek,
And her eye languiſh'd motionleſs and dim,
Perhaps ev'n then, in that ſad, diſmal hour,
My name ſtill hover'd on her quiv'ring lips,
And nought but death could tear me from her heart.

HENRICO.

Her tend'reſt thoughts no doubt were fix'd on thee.

FERDINAND.

Her tend'reſt thoughts? Oh! no: her utmoſt rage,
Who knows, Henrico, but ſhe deem'd me falſe;
Deem'd me a vile deſerter from her arms?
She did, ſhe muſt: each ſtrong appearance join'd
To mark me guilty. Oh! that thought ſtrikes deep
Its ſcorpion ſtings into my very heart.
Could ſhe but think me ſo refin'd in guilt,
So exquiſite a villain, as to cauſe
A moment's anguiſh in that tender breaſt,
Where all the loves, where all the virtues dwelt;
'Twere miſery, 'twere torture in th' extreme!
And yet ſhe thought me ſuch; by Heav'n ſhe did;
Accus'd me of the worſt, the blackeſt treaſon,
Of treaſon to my love! Stung with th' idea
She roam'd this iſle, and to theſe deſert wilds

Pour'd

Pour'd forth her lamentable tale. Who knows
But on ſome craggy cliff whole nights ſhe ſat
Raving in madneſs to the moon's pale gleam;
Until at length all kindling into phrenzy,
Claſping her infant cloſer to her breaſt,
With deſperation wild from off the rock
Headlong ſhe plung'd into the roaring ſea,
And her laſt accents murmur'd faithleſs Ferdinand!

HENRICO.

Diſtract not thus your ſoul with fancied woes.
She could not think thee faithleſs; thee, whoſe mind,
Whoſe ev'ry virtue were ſo well approv'd.

FERDINAND.

Still will I hope ſhe did not. Oh! ſhe knew
I made that voyage in duty to a father.
Awhile we ſteer'd a happy courſe, until
Beneath the burning line, from whence the ſun
In ſtraight direction pours his ardent blaze
On ev'ry fever'd ſenſe, a ſtorm aroſe,
Sudden and wild; as if a war of nature
Were thund'ring o'er our heads. Full twenty days
It drove us headlong on the daſhing ſurge
Far from our deſtin'd way, until at length
In evil hour we landed on this iſle.

SYLVIA returns, and peeps from behind a hedge.

SYLVIA.

Methought I heard a ſound, as if they both
Held mutual converſe. Yonder lo! they ſtand:
They do not follow me. What can they be?

FER-

FERDINAND.

There is the ſpot, juſt where yon aged tree
Imbrowns the plain beneath, on which the villains,
The unrelenting band of pirates, ſeiz'd me.
There I receiv'd my wound, and there I fought
Till my ſword ſhiver'd in my hand. Worn out,
Oppreſs'd by numbers, pow'rleſs, and diſarm'd,
They bore me headlong to the beach; in vain
Piercing the air with horrid cries; in vain
Back tow'rd the cave, where poor Conſtantia ſlept,
With her lov'd infant daughter in her arms,
Straining my ardent eyes; my eyes alone!
For oh! their cruelty had bound my arms,
And tears and looks were all I then could uſe.

SYLVIA.

The voice but indiſtinctly ſtrikes my ear.
Would they would turn this way.

FERDINAND.

Fetter'd, ty'd down,
They dragg'd me to the veſſel. Bore me hence.
In vain our ſhip purſu'd: in vain gave chace.
Form'd with deteſted ſkill, the guilty bark
In which they plung'd me, gliding o'er the main,
Outſtripp'd their tardy courſe. We ſteer'd away
Far to the regions of accurſed bondage.
Far from Conſtantia, far from ev'ry joy
A doating huſband, and delighted father
Feels in mix'd rapture with his wife and child.
Oh! I could pour my plaints—but I'll not wound
Thy ear, my friend, with further lamentation.

HENRICO.

Would Heaven I could remove the cauſe.

FER-

FERDINAND.

Alas!
That cannot be. Thou can'ſt not bid return
The irrevocable flight of time; recall
The moments of our young delight; annul
And render void, what once the hand of fate
Hath from it's ſtores of woe pour'd down upon me.

SYLVIA. (half concealed)

Why will they ſtand with looks averted thus?
I long to ſee their countenance and mien.

FERDINAND.

But yet, thou beſt of friends, yet grant me this.
Aſſiſt my ſearch; Oh! let me roam around
This fatal ſhore! the iſle's circumference
Circles a ſcanty ſpace. We cannot loſe
Each other here. Do thou purſue that path
That leads due eaſt: this way I'll bend my courſe.

HENRICO.

By Heav'n there is no taſk of hardihood,
Of toil, or danger, but I'll try for thee;
For thee, my friend: to thee I owe my life,
And that more precious boon, my liberty:
Thou haſt releas'd me from the galling chain,
From ſlav'ry's bitter preſſure. 'Twas thy ſkill
That form'd the plan of freedom, ſeiz'd the veſſel,
And made your friends the partners of your flight.
For thee I'll roam around: but oh! I fear
Our ſearch will prove in vain.

FERDINAND.

Too ſure it will.
And yet it is the doom of love like mine

To

To dwell for ever on the ſad idea
Of the dear object loſt; to viſit oft
(A lonely pilgrim) ev'ry well known ſcene,
Each haunted glade, where the lov'd object ſtray'd;
To call each circumſtance of paſs'd delight
Back to the ſoul: in fond excurſions ſeek
Her dear lamented form. Then, oh! my friend,
Then let me taſte that ſad, that penſive comfort.
Range thro' theſe wilds; aſcend each craggy ſteep,
Try in each grotto, in each gloomy cave
If haply there remain ſome veſtige of Conſtantia.

[Exit.

HENRICO.

On yonder beach we'll meet again. Farewell!

SYLVIA.

Conceal thee, Sylvia. Ah!—it comes this way!
Then let me ſeek the covert of the woods,
Where nods the browneſt horror; there lie ſafe
From the unuſual ſight of theſe ſtrange beings.

[Exit.

HENRICO, ſolus.

How cruel is my friend's condition! Doom'd
For ever to regret, yet never find
The object of his ſoul. His early love
He laviſh'd all on her: with her it goes
To the dank grave, and leaves him hapleſs here
To die a lingering death. Yet ſtill I'll try,
By ev'ry office friendſhip can perform,
To heal the wound that preys upon his life.

[Exit.

Scene

Scene, Another Part of the Iſland.

Enter SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

What have my eyes beheld? My flutt'ring heart
Beats quick in ſtrange emotions. From yon grove
Of tufted trees, I ſaw this nameleſs being
Walk o'er the ruſſet heath. It's face appear'd
Confeſs'd to view. It cannot be a man.
No lines of cruelty deform'd his viſage.
Were it a man, his untam'd, ſavage ſoul,
Would ſtrongly ſpeak in each diſtorted feature.
This was all pleaſing, amiable, and mild:
A gentle ſorrow, bright'ning into ſmiles,
Such as beſpoke a calm, yet feeling ſpirit,
Sat on it's peaceful brow, and o'er it threw
A gentle gleam of ſweetneſs and of pain.
It cannot be a woman neither; no;
The dreſs accords not with that mode, which oft
My mother hath deſcrib'd. Whate'er it be,
Attraction dwells about it; winning ſmiles;
Aſſuaſive airs of tenderneſs and joy.
I'll ſeek my mother: ſhe perhaps may know
Theſe forms, to me unuſual. By this row
Of darkſome pines, my ſteps, all unperceiv'd,
May gain the place where with aſſiduous hand
She works, and teaches the rude rocks to tell
Her mournful elegy. What mean my feet?
Why ſtand they thus forgetful of their office?
Why heaves th' involuntary ſigh? And why
Thus in quick pulſes beats my heart? My eyes
A miſty dimneſs covers: in my ears
Strange murmurs ſound; my very breath is loſt.
What can it be?—I know thee, Fear!—'tis thou
That cauſeſt this! And yet it can't be fear.

Fear

Fear cannot thrill with pleaſure thro' the veins;
Knows not this dubious joy, theſe grateful trem-
blings.
I cannot gueſs what theſe emotions mean,
Nor what this buſy thing my heart would want!
Let me ſeek ſhelter in my mother's arms. [Exit.

Scene changes to the firſt View of the Iſland, where Conſtantia's Inſcription is ſeen.

Enter FERDINAND.

FERDINAND.

No; never more ſhall theſe fond eyes behold her.
Loſt, loſt, my poor Conſtantia loſt! In vain
I ſearch theſe gloomy woods; in vain call out
Her honour'd name to ev'ry hill and dale.
My eyes are falſe, or on the craggy baſe
Of yonder rock ſome inſtrument appears,
The mark of human kind. A broken ſword!
Oh! all ye heav'nly pow'rs!—the very ſame!
This once was mine! Unfaithful to it's truſt,
It fail'd me at my utmoſt need. I ſee
The well known characters; the very words
That form'd it's motto. 'Tis, it is the ſame.
Oh! were Conſtantia found! What do I ſee?
All o'er with hair the flinty rock beſtrew'd!
Theſe were her decent treſſes; theſe in anguiſh
She tore relentleſs from her beauteous head,
Up by the roots ſhe tore, and ſcatter'd wild
To all the paſſing winds. She ſtill may live!
Conſtantia!—ha!—what myſtic characters
Are hewn into the rock?—My name appears!
(he reads)

STOP

STOP TRAVELLER.
HERE
CONSTANTIA,
WITH HER LITTLE INFANT,
SYLVIA,
WAS DESERTED BY HER HUSBAND,
THE PERFIDIOUS
FERDINAND;
WHO PRETENDING TO LAND HER
FOR REFRESHMENT
FROM THE DANGERS OF A STORMY SEA,
BARBAROUSLY LEFT HER
ON THIS UNHOSPITABLE ISLAND,
WHERE SHE ENDED HER DEPLORABLE LIFE.

Support me, Heav'n! Ah! no; withhold your aid,
Ye unrelenting Pow'rs, and let me thus,
Each vital ſpark ſubſiding, thus expire.
(leans againſt the rock)

Enter HENRICO.

HENRICO.

What hoa! my Ferdinand! this way the ſound
Struck on my liſt'ning ear. What means my friend
Thus growing to the rock, transform'd to ſtone,
A breathing ſtatue, midſt theſe ſhapeleſs piles?

FERDINAND.

Behold! read there!

HEN-

HENRICO.

Letters engrav'd!
[he reads part to himſelf, and then repeats aloud

SHE ENDED HER DEPLORABLE LIFE.

Alas! my friend—(They gaze ſpeechleſs at each other for ſome time, then Ferdinand falls)
The ſtorm of grief o'erpow'rs his feeble ſpirits.
Now rouze thy ſtrength, my Ferdinand, and bear
This load of ſorrow like a man.

FERDINAND.

I do;
Thou ſee'ſt I do. I do not weep, my friend.
Theſe eyes are dry; their very ſource is dry.
I am her cruel huſband to the laſt.

HENRICO.

Oh! thou wert ever kind and tender to her.

FERDINAND.

Tender and kind!—look there!—there ſtands the black,
The horrid roll of guilt denounc'd againſt me.
Lo! the dread characters! let me peruſe
The whole ſad record; of this bitter woe
Still deeper drink, and gorge me with affliction.
(he reads)

FRIEND!

WHOE'ER THOU ART,

PITY MY WRONGS,

BUT

BUT AGAINST MY HUSBAND,
(FOR LOVE LIKE MINE CANNOT FORGET
WHERE ONCE WITH DELIGHT IT FIXED)
I CHARGE YOU NEVER MEDITATE RE———

Revenge, ſhe meant to ſay: the word's begun!
But Death untimely ſtopt her hand. Oh! miſery!
She thought me falſe, and yet could love me ſtill.
The wound now pierces deeper. Had ſhe loath'd me,
Abhorr'd me, curs'd me, 'twere not half the torture
This angel-goodneſs cauſes. And to loſe her!
To loſe a mind like her's, that thus could pour
Such unexampled tenderneſs and love,
Amidſt the keeneſt anguiſh! On the earth
Meaſure thy length, thou wretch accurſt! there lie,
For ever lie, and to theſe woods and wilds
Howl out thy griefs in madneſs and deſpair.

HENRICO.

I feel, I feel thy ſorrows. Oh! my friend,
Cruel event! your tears, alas! are juſt.
Thoſe guſhing ſorrows may aſſauge your grief,
This ſtorm of rage attemp'ring into peace.

FERDINAND.

Who talks of peace? Let phrenzy ſeize my brain.
Come, moon-ſtruck Madneſs, with thy glaring eye,
And clanking chain; come, ſhoot thy kindling fires
Into my utmoſt ſoul; blaſt ev'ry pow'r;
Raze each idea out; tear up at once
The ſeat of memory—no—leave me that;
Still leave me memory, to picture forth
Conſtantia's lovely form, that I may ſit,
With unclad ſides, upon ſome blaſted heath,
And gloat upon her image; ſee her ſtill,

See her whole days with fancy's guſhing eye,
And gaze on that alone.

HENRICO.

Ariſe, my friend,
And quit this fatal ſhore.

FERDINAND.

And quit this ſhore!
But whither turn? Ah! whither ſhall I go?
Where ſhelter me from miſery?—This iſle
Shall be my journey's bound.

HENRICO.

What can'ſt thou mean?

FERDINAND.

Never again to draw the vital air
But where my love expir'd! To feed my ſoul
With theſe ſad objects, this ſepulchral tale,
Ev'n to the height of yet unheard-of anguiſh:
To print my pious kiſſes on the rock;
To bathe the ground, which her dear footſteps preſs'd,
With the inceſſant tears of burning anguiſh;
To make theſe wilds all vocal with her name,
Till this cold lifeleſs tongue ſhall move no more.

HENRICO.

By Heav'n, you muſt not ſtay.

FERDINAND.

Farewell! farewell!
Conſult thy happineſs!—for ever here
By fate I'm doom'd to ſtay. Alas! Conſtantia!

To

To periſh with thy infant here! No friend
To cloſe thy ghaſtly orbs! Thy pale remains
On the bare earth expos'd, without the tribute
Of a fond huſband's tears o'er thy dead corſe;
Without the laſt ſad obſequies! Yet here,
I ſtill will raiſe an empty ſepulchre.
There ſhall no cold, unconſcious marble form,
In mockery of imitated woe,
Bend o'er the fancy'd urn: myſelf will be
The ſad, the penſive, monumental figure,
Diſtilling real anguiſh o'er the tomb;
Till waſting by degrees I moulder down,
And ſink to ſilent duſt.

HENRICO.

What man could do,
Already you've perform'd——

FERDINAND.

Prithee, no more.
I will about it ſtreight. This place affords
Materials for the work. Thither I'll bring Whate'er can deck the ſcene. Conſtantia, yes:
I will appeaſe thy diſcontented ſhade,
Then follow thee to yonder realms of bliſs.
[Exit.

HENRICO.

His vehemence of grief bears down his reaſon.
He muſt not linger here. His ſtay were fatal.
Force will be neceſſary: to our veſſel
I'll haſten back, and call ſome truſty friends
To bear him from this melancholy ſhore.

End of the SECOND ACT.

ACT the THIRD.

The ſame Scene continues.

Enter SYLVIA.

THRO' the thick-woven ſhade of arching bowr's,
Thro' walks, where never ſun-beam pierc'd, at length
I've gain'd this deep-encircled vale. Ah! me!
I feel ſtrange tremors ſtill. She is not here!
Conſtantia!—no reply:—her mournful taſk
Waits for her ling'ring hand.—What noiſe is that?
I heard ſome ſteps advancing. 'Tis my fawn
That ruſtles thro' the foreſt glade: he ſtops
And looks, then runs, and ſtops again, to take
A fearful gaze! he too perhaps has ſeen
Theſe unknown beings. Yonder lo! he ſtands
In mute expreſſive wonder. Heav'n protect me!
Thro' this cloſe path, that gradual winding up
Leads on to plains, to woods, to verdant lawns
Emboſom'd in the rock, I'll journey up.
The day now glows intenſe, but by the rills,
That thro' embow'ring groves come purling down,
I oft can lay me, and enjoy each breeze
That plays amid thoſe craggy ſcenes. A noiſe
From yonder interwoven branches. Ha!
Ye guarding angels, ſave me!—ſee, ſee there!
It comes again!

Enter HENRICO.

HENRICO.

What beauteous form in theſe forelone abodes
Attracts my wond'ring eyes?

SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

Ye heav'nly powr's! [retiring from him.

HENRICO.

It ſwims before my ſight. Whate'er thou art,
Virgin, or goddeſs—oh! a goddeſs ſure!
Thou goddeſs of theſe manſions! for thy looks
Beam heav'nly radiance, with propitious ears
Accept my ſupplication.

SYLVIA.

Ha! it ſpeaks;
It ſpeaks! what doſt thou mean?

HENRICO.

Oh! ſay what place,
What clime is this? And what art thou that thus
Adorn'ſt this lone retreat?

SYLVIA.

Will you firſt
Promiſe to come no nearer?

HENRICO.

With devotion
As true as ever pilgrim offer'd up
In holy fervor to his ſaint, I promiſe.

SYLVIA.

How gentle it's demeanor! tell me now
Who and what art thou?

HENRICO.

I am born to miſery;
A man, whom fate——

SYLVIA.

A man!—art thou a man?
Defend me Heav'n! ye guardian powr's protect me, [runing away.

HENRICO.

Nay, fly me not: a ſudden impulſe here
Bids me purſue. Forgive, thou unknown fair,
That with ſoft violence I thus preſume
To force thee meaſure back thy ſteps again.
[he brings her back.

SYLVIA.

Force me not thus, inhuman, barb'rous man!
What have I ſaid—Oh! worthy gen'rous man,
Thus on my knees I beg; have mercy on me.
I never did you harm; indeed I did not.

HENRICO.

Ariſe, (raiſes her) thou lovely tenant of theſe woods,
And let me thus, thus as befits the man
Whoſe mind runs o'er with rapture and ſurprize,
Whoſe heart throbs wild with mingled doubt and joy,
Thus let me worſhip this celeſtial form,
This heav'nly brightneſs, to my wond'ring eyes
That ſheds ſuch influence, as when an angel
Breaks thro' a flood of glory to the ſight
Of ſome expiring ſaint, and cheers his ſoul
With viſions of diſcloſing heav'n.

SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

He kneels!
He kneels to me! how mild his e'ery look!
How ſoft each word!—can man be tender thus,
Of gentle mien, compaſſionate and kind?

HENRICO.

In me thou ſee'ſt a wretch, whoſe heart is prone
To melt at each idea beauty prints
On his delighted ſenſe; and ſure ſuch beauty,
Touch'd by the hand of harmony, adorn'd
With inexpreſſive graces, well may claim
My lowlieſt adoration and my love.

SYLVIA.

This language all is new; but ſtill it has
I know not what of charming in't, that gains
Upon the liſt'ning ear. If this be falſhood,
Then falſhood can aſſume a pleaſing look.

HENRICO.

Oh! if thou art as gracious as thou'rt fair,
Say have you ſeen Conſtantia? when and where,
And how did ſhe expire?

SYLVIA.

Conſtantia lives.
Why did'ſt thou ſay expire? My mother lives,
Lives in theſe bleſt abodes.

HENRICO.

Oh! gentle Sylvia,
So I will call thee, daughter of Conſtantia,
Oh! fly and find her out. Mean time I'll ſeek
Th' afflicted Ferdinand.——

SYLVIA.

What doſt thou ſay?
Can he, can Ferdinand be here? That falſe,
Perfidious, barb'rous man, can he be here?

HENRICO.

He is, my fair; nor barbarous nor falſe.
Fortune that made him wretched, could no more,
Anon you'll know the whole; to waſte a moment
In conf'rence now, and longer to ſuſpend
The meeting of this pair, who now in agony
Bemoan their lot, were barbarous indeed.

SYLVIA.

But may I truſt him? Won't he do her harm?

HENRICO.

He won't, my beauteous fair.

SYLVIA.

Is he like you?

HENRICO.

His goodneſs far tranſcends me.

SYLVIA.

Then I think
I'll venture to comply. Let's go together.

HENRICO.

Oh! I could tend thy ſteps for ever; hear
Soft accents warbling from thy vermeil lip;
Watch thy mild-glancing eye; behold how grace,

Whate'er you do, which ever way you bend,
Guides each harmonious movement; but this hour
Is friendſhip's due: then let us inſtant fly
Thro' diff'rent windings; thou to ſeek Conſtantia,
And I to find her huſband: haply ſo
Their meeting will be ſoon. Mean time farewell!
I'll bring him to this very ſpot. Adieu!
For a ſhort interval adieu, my love!

SYLVIA.

Farewell!—another word: pray what's your name?

HENRICO.

Fair excellence, Henrico I am call'd.

SYLVIA.

Pray do not tarry long, Henrico.

HENRICO.

Why
That pleaſing charge, my ſweet?

SYLVIA.

I cannot tell;
But as you're leaving me, each ſtep you move,
My ſpirits ſink; a melancholy gloom
Darkens the ſcene around, and I methinks
Helpleſs in ſolitude am left again,
To wander all alone a dreary way.

HENRICO.

Thou angel ſweetneſs! I'll return anon;
Yes, I will come, and at that lovely ſhrine
Pour out my adoration and my vows.

Yes,

Yes, I will come, to part from thee no more;
A moment now farewell! [Exit.

SYLVIA. (alone)

Farewell! be ſure you keep your word: he's gone,
And yet is with me ſtill. Abſent I hear
And ſee him in his abſence: ſtill his looks
Beam with mild dignity, and ſtill his voice
Sounds in my ear delightful. What it means,
This new-born ſenſe, this wonderful emotion,
Unfelt till now, and mix'd of pain and joy,
I cannot gueſs. How my heart flutters in me!
I'll not perplex myſelf with vain conjecture.
Whate'er the cauſe, th' effect, I feel, is pleaſing.

[Conſtantia is heard ſinging within the ſcenes.

Ah! me! what noiſe is that? My mother's voice
Again ſhe pours her melancholy forth,
As ſweetly plaintive, as when Philomel,
Beneath ſome poplar ſhade, bemoans her young;
And ſitting penſive on the lonely bough,
Her eye with ſorrow dimm'd, ſhe tunes her dirge,
Warbling the night away, while all around
The vocal woodland, and each hill and dale
Ring with her griefs harmonious. Hark! that way
It ſounds. All gracious pow'rs direct me to her.
[Exit.

Enter CONSTANTIA.

CONSTANTIA.

From walk to walk, from glade to glade, o'er all
The ſea-girt iſle, o'er ev'ry mountain's top,
I roam from place to place; but oh! no place
Affords relief to me. The ſun now leads
The ſultry hours, and from his burning ray
Each living thing retires; yet I endure

His

His fierceſt rage. The fever in my mind
Heeds not external circumſtance: each day
Sees this ſad heart freſh bleeding as at firſt.
Delay not thus, ye cruel fates, but come
And wrap me in eternal reſt. Till then Let me purſue my melancholy taſk.
[works at the inſcription.

Enter FERDINAND.

FERDINAND.

Away with their ill-tim'd officious care.
I'll none of it. 'Tis cruelty, not friendſhip:
'Tis miſery protracted; 'tis with art,
Inhuman art to lengthen out the life
Of him, who groans in torment. No; they never ſhall
Compel me back to a baſe world again!
I've liv'd enough: my courſe is ended here;
For here Conſtantia lies. Ye heav'nly pow'rs!
What means upon yon conſecrated ground
That viſionary form, with lifted arm
And gleaming ſteel, that ſeems in act to carve
The rugged ſtone?

CONSTANTIA.

What is't I hear! a voice!
A groan! from whence—ha! [Seeing Ferdinand.

FERDINAND.

'Tis Conſtantia's form!
Her diſcontented ſhade, that hovers ſtill
About this place.

CON-

CONSTANCIA.

Deluſive, air-drawn ſhape
Of that perfidious—ah! [She faints away.

FERDINAND.

Leave me not thus.
Oh! ever gracious, ever gentle, ſay;
'Tis gone; in ſullen ſilence gone!

Enter HENRICO.

HENRICO.

Quick let me find him, to his raptur'd ear
Give the delightful tidings—ha!

FERDINAND.

And thus
I ſink at once and follow my belov'd, [Falls into Henrico's arms.

HENRICO.

He faints, he faints; the chilling dews of death
Diſtil thro' every pore. My Ferdinand,
Awake, ariſe, and hear the joyful ſounds
Of happineſs reſtor'd. His eyes unfold
To ſeek fair day light, and now cloſe again
As if they ſicken'd at the view.

FERDINAND.

Forbear,
And let me die!

HEN-

HENRICO.

Conſtantia lives! ſhe lives
Once more to fold thee in her warm embrace.

FERDINAND.

I ſaw her fleeting form: ſullen and pale
It vaniſh'd from my ſight.

CONSTANTIA.

Alas! no help!
Oh! death, where art thou? [coming to herſelf.

HENRICO.

Whence that voice?
Conſtantia there! behold! ſhe too entranc'd
Lies ſtretch'd upon the ground.

FERDINAND.

Where is Conſtantia?
Oh! let me catch the fleeting ſhade. 'Tis ſhe!
It is my wife! it is Conſtantia! ſtill,
Oh! ecſtaſy of bliſs? She ſtill ſurvives!

CONSTANTIA.

'Tis mere illuſion all; the falſe creation
Of ſome deceitful dream.

FERDINAND.

'Tis real all.
Again I fold her thus! the known embrace
Hath thrill'd it's wonted tranſport to my heart.
My life, my ſoul, thy Ferdinand is come.

CON-

CONSTANTIA.

And com'ſt thou then, inhuman as thou art,
Com'ſt thou again to wreak thy malice on me?

FERDINAND.

By heav'n I ne'er was falſe. Daſh not my joys
With thy unkind ſuſpicion of my love,
While thus tranſported far above the lot
Of human bliſs, I preſs my lips to thine,
Inhaling balmy ſweets, and all my ſoul
Runs o'er with bliſs, with wonder and delight.

CONSTANTIA.

Did'ſt thou not meanly leave me here a prey—

FERDINAND.

And can Conſtantia deem me then ſo baſe?
Can ſhe believe me ſuch a vile betrayer?
Can'ſt thou?

CONSTANTIA.

On this unhoſpitable ſhore
Left as I was——

FERDINAND.

Oh! miſery! thou we'rt!
While I was dragg'd by an inſidious band
Of pyrates, ſavage blood-hounds! into bondage.
But witneſs heav'n, witneſs ye midnight hours
That heard my ceaſeleſs groans, how dear thy image
Grew to my very heart!

CON-

CONSTANTIA.

And ha'ſt thou then
Been doom'd to ſlavery?

FERDINAND.

I have.

CONSTANTIA.

And groan'd
This long, long time beneath oppreſſion's rod?

FERDINAND.

E'er ſince theſe eyes have gaz'd delighted on thee,
The bitter draught of miſery was mine.

CONSTANTIA.

And wert thou true indeed?

FERDINAND.

By Heav'n I was.

COMSTANTIA.

And have I then accus'd thee? Have I pour'd
A thouſand ſtrong complaints againſt thee? Called High judging Heav'n to witneſs to my wrongs?
Told all theſe wilds, theſe rocks, theſe wood crown'd hills
Of injur'd truth and violated love?
Falſely I talk'd, unjuſtly I complain'd
Of injur'd truth and violated love;
My Ferdinand was true! again 'tis giv'n
With his lov'd form to glad theſe eyes, to ruſh
With eager tranſport to his fond embrace,

To

To cling around his neck, and growing to him
Pour the warm tears of rapture and of love.
[they embrace.

Enter SYLVIA.

SYLVIA.

I heard my mother's voice. What do I ſee?
In a man's arms! embracing and embrac'd!

FERDINAND.

Is that my Sylvia? Oh! it muſt be ſo.
My child, my child ſurvives! ſurvives to take
A raptur'd father's bleſſing, and o'erpay
His ſuff'rings paſt by this exceſs of joy,
This interview of mingled tears and kiſſes.

SYLVIA.

How gentle his deportment too! I feel
A ſoft attraction bind my ſoul to his.
Are theſe the men, whom you ſo oft deſcrib'd
Inexorable, cruel, fell deceivers?

CONSTANTIA.

I was deceiv'd myſelf, my child; for truth,
Honour, and love, and conſtancy are theirs.
I now have proof of unexampled goodneſs.

SYLVIA.

Indeed I ſtrongly thought you wrong'd 'em much,
When firſt Henrico met my wond'ring eyes.

FERDINAND.

Henrico is my friend, my beſt Conſtantia,
And thou hereafter ſhalt know all his virtues.

SYLVIA

SYLVIA.

And ſhall I know him too?

HENRICO.

Thou ſhalt; and I
Will live thy ſlave, if thou wilt deign to love me.

SYLVIA.

Love you! I know not what you mean by love;
But if with pleaſure to behold thee; if
To hang upon thy words; to mourn thy abſence;
With joy to meet again, and feel my heart
Form new deſires, and wiſh it knows not what,
If that be love, I do already love you.

HENRICO.

Then am I bleſs'd indeed! yes, thou ſhalt be——
My friend will ſmile conſent—yes thou, fair nymph,
Shalt be my bride.

SYLVIA.

Your bride! what's that?

HENRICO.

My wife.

SYLVIA.

No, Sir, not that. I crave your pardon there.
To be left helpleſs on a deſert iſland!

CONSTANTIA.

Thy father did not leave me, Sylvia; no;

He could not prove deliberately falſe,
His heart was unſuſceptible of fraud.
Anon you'll know it all.

HENRICO.

Mean time, my fair,
Baniſh thy fears; and let me with this kiſs
On the white ſoftneſs of this lovely hand,
For ever dedicate my heart.

SYLVIA.

Oh! Heavn's!
What muſt I do, Mama?

CONSTANTIA.

Requite his love
With fair return of thine.

SYLVIA.

Muſt I do ſo?
The taſk appears not undelightful; yes,
To thee I can reſign myſelf. But tell me;
Wilt thou ne'er leave me? Wilt thou ever here
Fix thy abode?

HENRICO.

No; we'll convey thee hence,
To the ſoft influence of a milder clime:
There, like a flow'r tranſplanted, thou ſhalt flouriſh,
And ne'er regret this warmer ſouthern ſky,
But thrive and ripen, to the wond'ring world
Unfolding all thy ſweets to higher bloom.

SYLVIA.

What place is that? And whither will ye bear me?

FER-

FERDINAND.

To thy dear native ſoil, to England, love.

SYLVIA.

To England!

HENRICO.

Yes! the land of beauteous dames:
'Mongſt whom thy matchleſs excellence ſhall ſhine
With undiminiſh'd radiance, and exert
It's gentle pow'r, by innocence endear'd,
By virtue heighten'd, and by modeſt truth
Attemper'd to ſuch ſweetneſs, that each fair,
With unrepining heart, and glad conſent
Shall own thy rival claim; and ev'ry youth,
Touch'd by the graces of thy native beauty,
Shall join to make thy form the public care.

SYLVIA.

I cannot quit this Iſland; cannot leave
Theſe woods, theſe lawns, theſe hills and deepning vales,
Theſe ſtreams oft-viſited, each well known haunt,
Where hand in hand with innocence I've ſtray'd,
And taſted joys ſerene as is the air,
That pants upon yon trembling leaves.

FERDINAND.

Such joys
For thee ſhall bloſſom in thy native land,
And new delights ariſe. There cultur'd fields
Wave with the golden harveſt; commerce pours
Each delicacy forth; there ſtately domes
Attract the wond'ring eye; there cities ſwarm
With buſy throngs intenſe, and ſmiles around

A ſcene of active, cheerful, ſocial life.
Thither I'll lead thee, ſweet.

SYLVIA.

And yet my heart
Miſgives me much: does not contention there,
And civil diſcord render life a ſcene
Of care, and toil, and ſtruggle? Does not war
From foreign nations oft invade the land,
With all his train of miſery and death?

FERDINAND.

Thy lovely fears are groundleſs. Ours the land,
Where inward peace diffuſes ſmiles around,
And ſcatters wide her bleſſings: there a king,
(My friend comes later thence, and tells me all)
There reigns a happy, venerable king,
Diſpenſing juſtice and maintaining laws,
That bind alike his people and himſelf.
From that ſcource liberty, and ev'ry claim
A free-born people boaſt, flow equal on,
And harmonize the ſtate; while in the eve
And calm decline of life our monarch ſees
A royal grandſon ſtill to higher luſtre
Each day expanding; emulous to trace
His grandſire's ſteps, to copy out his actions;
And bid the ray of freedom onward ſtretch
To ages yet unborn.

SYLVIA.

And do the people
Know their own happineſs?

FERDINAND.

They do, my ſweet:

Pleas'd

Pleas'd they behold their native rights ſecur'd;
Their commerce guarded, and the uſeful arts,
That raiſe, that ſoften, and embelliſh life,
All to perfection riſing. With a ſenſe
Of their own bleſſing touch'd, with one conſent
They pour their treaſures, and exhauſt their blood
In their king's righteous cauſe. Fair Albion thus Raiſes her envied head; thus ev'ry threat
Of foreign force, each menace of invaſion
From a vain, vanquiſh'd, diſappointed foe,
Like broken billows on her craggy cliffs,
Shall murmur at her feet in vain.

SYLVIA.

Methinks
I long to ſee this place.

FERDINAND.

My Sylvia, yes,
Thou ſhalt return: propitious gales invite.
Come, my Conſtantia——oh! what mix'd emotions
Heave in this boſom at the ſight of thee?

CONSTANTIA.

My heart runs o'er with exſtacy of joy,
And tears muſt ſpeak my happineſs. I long
To utter all my fond, fond thoughts; to tell
The ſtory of my woes, and hear of thine;
While at each word our hearts ſhall melt within us,
And thrill with grief, with tenderneſs, and love.

FERDINAND.

The tale ſhall ſerve us in our future hours
Of tender intercourſe, to ſweeten pain,
To calm adverſity, and teach our ſouls

To

To bend in love, in gratitude, and praiſe
To the All-good on high, who thus befriends
The cauſe of innocence; who thus rewards
Our ſuffering conſtancy; whoſe hand, tho' ſlow,
Thus leads to rapture thro' a train of woe.

End of the THIRD VOLUME.

THE

WORKS

OF

ARTHUR MURPHY, Esq.

IN SEVEN VOLUMES.

VOL. IV.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR T. CADELL,
IN THE STRAND.
M.DCC.LXXXVII.

CONTENTS

OF THE

FOURTH VOLUME.

	Page.
KNOW YOUR OWN MIND, a Comedy, -	7
THE SCHOOL FOR GUARDIANS, a Comedy, in three Acts, - - - - - -	183
THE CHOICE, a Comedy, in two Acts, -	303
NEWS FROM PARNASSUS, a Prelude, - -	391

Know your own Mind:

A

COMEDY,

Performed at the

THEATRE ROYAL

IN

COVENT-GARDEN.

——— Pugnat ſententia ſecum;
Quod petiit, ſpernit; repetit quod nuper omiſit;
Æſtuat, & vitæ diſconvenit ordine toto.

HOR.

Ut callidum ejus ingenium, ita anxium judicium.

TACIT.

PROLOGUE.

Spoken by Mr. LEWIS.

THROUGH the wide tracts of life, in ev'ry trade,
What numbers toil with faculties decay'd?
Worn out, yet eager, in the race they run,
And never learn——when proper to have done.

What need of proofs? Ev'n Authors do the ſame,
And rather than deſiſt, decline in fame.
Like Gameſters thrive at firſt; then bolder grow,
And hazard all upon one deſp'rate throw.

This truth to feel, perhaps too much, inclin'd,
Our Bard, long hackney'd, trembles there behind,
Leſt he ſhould prove——another VANISH'D MIND.
Long has his play lain hid, ſuppreſs'd by fears,
Beyond the critics rule, ABOVE NINE YEARS!
And now he comes, 'tis the plain ſimple truth,
This night to anſwer for his ſins of youth.

The piece, you'll ſay, ſhould now perfection bear;
But who can reach it after all his care?
He paints no monſters for ill-judg'd applauſe:
Life he has view'd; and from that ſource he draws.

Here are no fools, the Drama's ſtanding jeſt!
And WELCHMEN now, NORTH-BRITONS too may reſt.
HIBERNIA'S SONS ſhall here excite no wonder,
Nor ſhall ST. PATRICK bluſh to hear them blunder.
By other arts he ſtrives your taſte to hit,
Some plot, ſome character; he hopes, ſome wit.
And if this piece ſhould pleaſe you like the paſt;
Ye Brother Bards! forgive him:——'tis his laſt.

Loſt are the friends who lent their aid before;
ROSCIUS retires, and BARRY is no more.
Harmonious BARRY! with what varied art
His grief, rage, tenderneſs aſſail'd the heart?
Of plaintive OTWAY now no more the boaſt!
And SHAKESPEARE grieves for his OTHELLO loſt.
Oft on this ſpot the tuneful ſwan expir'd,
Warbling his grief; you liſten'd and admir'd.
'Twas then but fancied woe; now ev'ry Muſe,
Her lyre unſtrung, with tears his urn bedews.

From this night's ſcenes e'n WOODWARD too is fled,
Stretch'd by pale ſickneſs on his languid bed,
Nor can THALIA raiſe her FAVOURITE'S * head.

* Mr. WOODWARD was to have played the part of DASHWOULD: in his laſt illneſs he lamented to the Author, that he could not cloſe his theatrical life with that character: he died a few weeks after the play appeared; for years the life of the comic ſcene, and in his end regretted as a worthy and an honeſt man.

For

For them our Author lov'd the tale to weave;
He feels their loſs, and now he takes his leave;
Sees new performers in ſucceſſion ſpring,
And hopes new poets will expand their wing.
Beneath your ſmile his leaf of laurel grew;
Gladly he'd keep it;——for 'twas giv'n by you.
But if too weak his art, if wild his aim,
On favours paſt he builds no idle claim.
To you once more he boldly dares to truſt;
HEAR, and pronounce;——he KNOWS you will be juſt.

Dramatis Perſonæ.

MEN.

MILLAMOUR,	Mr. LEWIS.
DASHWOULD,	Mr. LEE-LEWES.
MALVIL,	Mr. WROUGHTON.
BYGROVE,	Mr. AICKIN.
Captain BYGROVE, his Son,	Mr. BOOTH.
Sir JOHN MILLAMOUR, Father to Millamour,	Mr. FEARON.
Sir HARRY LOVEWIT,	Mr. WHITFIELD.
CHARLES, Servant to Millamour,	Mr. WEWITZER.

Footmen, &c.

WOMEN.

Lady BELL,	Mrs. MATTOCKS.
Lady JANE,	Miſs DAYES.
Mrs. BROMLEY,	Mrs. JACKSON.
Miſs NEVILLE,	Mrs. HARTLEY.
Madam LA ROUGE,	Miſs AMBROSE.

Know your own Mind.

ACT the FIRST.

Scene, the Houſe of Sir JOHN MILLAMOUR.

Enter Sir JOHN, and BYGROVE.

BYGROVE.

WHY then I'd marry again, and diſinherit him.

Sir JOHN.

Brother Bygrove, you think too ſeverely in theſe matters.

BYGROVE.

Severely, Sir John? If I had a mind that my ſon ſhould marry, why ſhould not he do as I would have him?

Sir JOHN.

Allowance muſt be made for inclination. The ſucceſs of our children depends upon the manner, in which we ſet them out in the world. They are like bowls which, if deliverd out of hand with a due regard to their bias, our aim is anſwer'd! if otherwiſe, they are ſhort or wide of the mark in view, or perhaps ruſh wildly out of the green.

BYGROVE.

Well argued, truly! he that ſhould obey is to judge for himſelf, and you that are his governor, are to be directed by him.

SIR JOHN.

Why he is chiefly intereſted in the end, and the choice of the means may be fairly left to himſelf. I can't but be tender of George; a plant of my own rearing, and the tree will hereafter be known by its fruit.

BYGROVE.

It is a tree that will bear nothing without grafting; and if I could not inoculate what will make it thrive and flouriſh, it ſhould not incumber a foot of my land.

SIR JOHN.

Your ſyſtem, and mine, differ widely, Brother Bygrove. My ſon is of an enlarged and liberal underſtanding, and I a father of mild authority.

BYGROVE.

Authority!—your ſon's word is a law to you. Now there is my young graceleſs; he is in the army, and why? Becauſe I choſe it. I had a mind he ſhould ſerve; and ſo he went to be ſhot at. No arguing with me. If I ſee any thing wrong, I accoſt him directly: Look ye, Sir, do you think to go on in this faſhion? Not during my life, I promiſe you: I will acknowledge you no longer than you prove worthy; and if you can't diſcern what is befitting you, you, I at leaſt will judge what is proper on my part.

Sir JOHN.

Well, George and I have lived together as friends. From a boy, I endeavoured to ſubject him rather to his reaſon, than his fears. If any little irregularity happened, he was no ſooner ſenſible of it, than his cheek coloured, and the bluſh of youth not only looked decent, but expreſſed an ingenuous, and well-diſpoſed mind.

BYGROVE.

But the conſequence of all this? Has he a ſettled opinion? a fixed principle for a moment? He is grown up in caprice; his judgment has not vigour to be deciſive upon the mereſt trifle; he is diſtracted by little things, and of courſe is periſhing by little and little.

Sir JOHN.

Oh! no; all from a good cauſe; his knowledge of life occaſions quick reflection: quick reflection ſhews things in a variety of lights. I am not angry. He will ſettle in the world; you will ſee him married before long.

BYGROVE.

In what a variety of lights his wife will appear to him!

Sir JOHN.

I beg your pardon, for a moment. I ſee a perſon there. Charles, Charles, this way.

Enter

Enter CHARLES.

Sir JOHN.

Well, Charles, what is he about?

CHARLES.

Very buſy, Sir, a thouſand things in hand.

BYGROVE.

And all at the ſame time, I'll warrant.

CHARLES.

We have a deal to employ us, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

Have you ſounded him in regard to what I mentioned laſt night?

CHARLES.

That's what I wanted to tell your Honour. Laſt night, Sir, as he was going to bed, I touch'd upon the ſubject; dropt a hint or two, that it is now time to think of raiſing heirs to himſelf; enlarged upon the comforts of matrimony, and I think with no ſmall degree of eloquence.

BYGROVE.

The fellow is laughing at you.

Sir JOHN.

Well, and how? What effect?

CHARLES.

CHARLES.

A very viſible effect, Sir. This morning early, my maſter rings his bell. Charles, ſays he, I have been conſidering what you ſaid laſt night: I ſhall pay a viſit to the young ladies, and, I believe, I ſhall marry one of them.

Sir JOHN.

There, Mr. Bygrove; I am for ever obliged to you, Charles. Well, go on.

CHARLES.

I fly immediately to get him his things to dreſs, and return in an inſtant. Charles, ſays he, then toſſed himſelf back in his chair, beat the ground with his heel, and fell a reading. Won't your Honour get ready to viſit the young ladies?—The ladies? what ladies, you blockhead?—Lady Bell, and Lady Jane, your Honour, Mrs. Bromley's handſome nieces. Po! you're a numſkull, ſays he, with an oblique kind of a ſmile; ſtretched his arms, yawned, talked to himſelf, and bade me go about my buſineſs.

BYGROVE.

I knew it would end ſo. There is not a crane-neck carriage in town can give a ſhort turn with him. He will continue going on from one thing to another, and end in nothing at laſt.

Sir JOHN.

This is provoking. Any body with him this morning?

CHARLES.

CHARLES.

He has had a power of people with him, Sir—A commiſſion-broker, to ſell him a company in a marching regiment; the Mayor of a borough, about a ſeat in Parliament. And there are ſeveral with him now, Sir. There is Sir Harry Lovewit, and——

BYGROVE.

Aye! Sir Harry! I am glad he is of age, and that I am no longer his guardian. He has not had a new idea in his head ſince he was five years old, and yet the blockhead affects to be lively. He runs after wits, who do nothing but laugh at him. He repeats ſcraps and ſentences; all memory and no underſtanding; a mere retailer of what falls from other people, and with that ſtock he ſets up for a wit.

CHARLES.

He is with my maſter, Sir; and there is Mr. Malvil, and Mr. Daſhwould, and—(bell rings)——He rings, Sir: you will pardon me; I muſt be gone, Sir. [Exit.

BYGROVE.

And that fellow, Daſhwould; he is the ruin of your ſon, and of poor Sir Harry into the bargain. He is the Merry Andrew of the town: honour has no reſtraint upon him; truth he ſets at nought, and friendſhip he is ever ready to ſacrifice to a joke.

Sir JOHN.

Po! mere innocent pleaſantry. Daſhwould has no harm in him.

BY-

BYGROVE.

No harm in him? I grant you the fellow has a quick ſenſe of the ridiculous, and draws a character with a lucky hit. But every thing is diſtorted by him. He has wit to ridicule you; invention to frame a ſtory of you; humour to help it about, and when he has ſet the town a laughing, he puts on a familiar air, and ſhakes you by the hand.

Enter Sir HARRY, laughing violently.

Sir HARRY.

Oh! ho! ho! I ſhall certainly expire one day, in a fit of laughing.

Sir JOHN.

What's the matter, Sir Harry?

BYGROVE.

What fool's errand brings him hither?

Sir HARRY.

That fellow, Daſhwould, will be the death of me. The very ſpirit of whim, wit, humour, and raillery poſſeſs him.

BYGROVE.

Ay! wit and humour for the meridian of your underſtanding.

Sir HARRY.

By the ſhade of Rablais, he is the moſt entertaining

ing creature! He has played off ſuch a fire-work of wit. I'll tell you what he ſaid this moment.

BYGROVE.

No, Sir, no; if you are a pedlar in ſmart ſayings, and briſk repartees, we don't deſire you to unpack for us.

Sir HARRY.

A plague on him for an agreeable devil! And then the rogue has ſo much eaſe.

BYGROVE.

Yes, the eaſe of an executioner. He puts all to death, without remorſe. He laughs at every thing, as if Heaven intended to make it's own work ridiculous. He has no reliſh for beauty, natural or moral. He is in love with deformity, and never better pleaſed, than when he has moſt reaſon to find fault.

Sir HARRY.

There is a picture of as harſh features as any in Daſhwould's whole collection.

BYGROVE.

But the picture is true. No exaggeration in it.

Sir HARRY.

He gave us a miniature of you, this morning, my dear guardian, and you ſhall have it. Daſhwould has made a diſcovery, Sir John. What reaſon do you think he gives for Mr. Bygrove's railing for ever at your ſon's inconſtancy of temper?

BY-

BYGROVE.

Ay, now! now!

Sir HARRY.

You poſitively ſhall hear it. Mr. Bygrove's deſires being all ruſted to a point, looking directly toward the land of matrimony—

BYGROVE.

Matrimony! now gild the pill with humour, an down it goes.

Sir HARRY.

Daſhwould has found you out. Mr. Bygrove's deſires being all collected and fixed on matrimony, he rails at the variety of my friend Millamour's whimſies, like Sir George Bumper, with chalkſtones on his knuckles, as big as nutmegs, hobbling along and thanking Doctor Le Fevre that he has no ſmall humours flying about him.

Sir JOHN.

That's a diſcovery indeed.

BYGROVE.

Sir John, can you mind what ſuch a fellow as Daſhwould ſays? Every thing that paſſes through the medium of his fancy appears deformed, as the ſtraiteſt ſtick looks crooked in troubled water.

Sir HARRY.

Well daſhed out, upon my ſoul, with tolerable ſpleen, and ſome vivacity.

BYGROVE.

Po!—if you had taken my advice, Sir Harry, and renounced his acquaintance long ago, you had been now a young man coming into life, with ſome promiſe of a character. Continue in diſſipation, Sir. For my part, it is a rule with me, neither to give, nor take a joke.

Sir HARRY.

Ho! ho! ho! a pleaſant rule, poſitively—ho! ho! ho! Daſhwould ſhall have it this moment; do you take the conſequence; and in the mean time I'll leave you to the practiſe of your ſocial humour.

[Exit.

BYGROVE.

It is ſuch coxcombs as that butterfly, that encourage him to fix his paſquinades upon every man's character. Matrimony!——a licentious——No, Sir John, I ſtill cheriſh the memory of your ſiſter; ſhe was the beſt of wives: 'ſdeath interrupted again by that——No, it's my friend, Malvil; he is a man of true value.

Sir JOHN.

Daſhwould ſays he is a compound of falſe charity, and real malice.

BYGROVE.

And it is enough for you that Daſhwould ſays it. Malvil is a man of honour, Sir; and an enemy to all ſcandal, though wit prove a palateable ingredient in the poiſon.

Enter

Enter MALVIL.

MALVIL.

Intolerable! there is no being ſafe where he is. A licentious railer! All truth, all morality ſacrificed to a jeſt: nothing ſacred from his buffoonery.

BYGROVE.

I told you, Sir John, how it is.

MALVIL.

Oh! ſuch indiſcriminate ſatire!

BYGROVE.

Yes, the fellow runs a muck, and nothing eſcapes him.

MALVIL.

There is no enduring it. Ridicule is a very unfair weapon, Mr. Bygrove: it is by no means the teſt of truth, Sir John.

Sir JOHN.

Nay, but you are too grave about this matter.

MALVIL.

Too grave! Shall he wantonly ſtab the reputation of his neighbour, and then tell you it was in jeſt? For my part, I had rather throw a veil over the infirmities of my friend, than ſeek a malicious pleaſure in the detection. That's my way of thinking.

Sir JOHN.

I fancy you are right. This ſon of mine does ſo perplex me. (walks aſide)

MALVIL.

Pray, Mr. Bygrove, give me leave. I am ſorry to hear certain whiſpers about a friend of ours.

BYGROVE.

About whom? the widow, Mrs. Bromley?

MALVIL.

Oh! no, no; I have a great reſpect for her: though I—Pray don't you think ſhe throws out the lure for a young huſband?

BYGROVE.

For a huſband, yes; but not too young a one: you can ſerve my intereſt in that quarter.

MALVIL.

I know it: rely upon my friendſhip. But have you heard nothing of an eminent Turkey merchant?

BYGROVE.

Mr. Freeport?

MALVIL.

I ſay nothing: I don't like the affair: have you really heard nothing?

BYGROVE.

Not a ſyllable.

MAL-

MALVIL.

So much the better: though it is fit you ſhould be put on your guard. Any money of yours in his hands?

BYGROVE.

Po! as ſafe as the Bank.

MALVIL.

I may be miſtaken. I hope I am: I was in company, the other night; ſeveral Members of Parliament preſent; they did not ſpeak plainly; hints and inuendo's only; you won't let it go any further. His ſeat in the houſe, they all agreed, is perfectly convenient at this juncture. I hope the cloud will blow over.——I ſhall remember you with the widow.

BYGROVE.

One good turn deſerves another: I ſhan't be unmindful of your intereſt.

MALVIL.

There, now you hurt me: you know my delicacy: muſt friendſhip never act a diſintereſted part? I eſteem you, Mr. Bygrove, and that's ſufficient. Sir John, give me leave to ſay, the man who buſies himſelf about other people's affairs, is a pragmatical character, and very dangerous in ſociety.

BYGROVE.

So I have been telling Sir John. But to laugh at every thing is the faſhion of the age. A pleaſant good-for-nothing fellow is by moſt people preferred to modeſt merit. A man like Daſhwould, who runs on——So! here comes Scandal in folio.

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

Sir John, I rejoice to ſee you. Mr. Bygrove, I kiſs your hand. Malvil, have you been uneaſy for any friend ſince?

MALVIL.

Po! abſurd! (walks away)

DASHWOULD.

I have been laughing with your ſon, Sir John. Pray, have I told you about Sir Richard Doriland?

BYGROVE.

You may ſpare him, Sir, he is a very worthy man.

DASHWOULD.

He is ſo: great good nature about him: I love Sir Richard. You know he was divorced from his wife; a good fine woman, but an invincible ideot.

MALVIL.

Look ye there now, Mr. Bygrove!

BYGROVE.

My Lady Doriland, Sir, was always counted a very ſenſible woman.

DASHWOULD.

She was ſo; with too much ſpirit to be ever at eaſe, eaſe, and a rage for pleaſure, that broke the bubble, as ſhe graſped it. She fainted away, upon hearing that Mrs. All-night had two card tables more than herſelf.

BYGROVE.

Inveterate malice!

DASHWOULD.

They waged war a whole winter, for the honour of having the greateſt number of fools thinking of nothing but the odd trick. Firſt, Mrs. All-night kept Sundays; her Ladyſhip did the ſame: Mrs. All-night had forty tables; her Ladyſhip roſe to fifty. Then one added, then t'other; 'till every room in the houſe was cramm'd like the black hole at Calcutta, and at laſt, upon caſting up the account, Sir Richard ſold off fifteen hundred acres, to clear incumbrances.

Sir JOHN.

Ridiculous! and ſo they parted upon this?

DASHWOULD.

Don't you know the hiſtory of that buſineſs?

MALVIL.

Now mark him; now.

DASHWOULD.

Tender of reputation, Malvil!—The ſtory is well known. She was detected with—the little foreign Count—I call him the Salamander—I ſaw him five times in one winter upon the back of the fire at Bath, for cheating at cards.

MALVIL.

Go on, Sir, abuſe every body. My Lady was perfectly innocent. I know the whole affair: a mere contrivance to lay the foundation of a divorce.

DASHWOULD.

So they gave out. Sir Richard did not care a nine-pin for her, while ſhe was his. You know his way: he deſpiſes what is in his poſſeſſion, and languiſhes for what is not. Her Ladyſhip was no ſooner married to——what's his name?——His father was a footman, and Madam Fortune, who every now and then loves a joke, ſent him to the Eaſt Indies, and in a few years brought him back at the head of half a million, for the jeſt's ſake.

MALVIL.

Mr. Daſhwould, upon my word, Sir,——Families to be run down in this manner!

DASHWOULD.

Muſhroon was his name: my Lady Dorſland was no ſooner married to him, but up to his eyes Sir Richard was in love with her. He dreſſed at her; ſighed at her; danced at her; ſhe is now libelled in the Commons, and Sir Richard has a crim. con. againſt him in the King's Bench.

MALVIL.

Pſhaw! I ſhall ſtay no longer to hear this ſtrain of defamation. [Exit.

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

Malvil, muſt you leave us? A pleaſant character this ſame Mr. Malvil.

BYGROVE.

He has a proper regard for his friends, Sir.

DASHWOULD.

Yes, but he is often preſent where their characters are canvaſſed, and is anxious about whiſpers which nobody has heard. He knows the uſe of hypocriſy better than a Court Chaplain.

BYGROVE.

There, call honeſty by a burleſque name, and ſo pervert every thing.

DASHWOULD.

Things are more perverted, Mr. Bygrove, when ſuch men as Malvil make their vices do their work, under a maſk of goodneſs; and with that ſtroke we'll diſmiſs his character.

Sir JOHN.

Ay, very right; my brother Bygrove has a regard for him, and ſo change the ſubject. My ſon, Mr. Daſhwould, what does he intend?

DASHWOULD.

Up to the eyes in love with Lady Bell, and determined to marry her.

Sir JOHN.

I told you ſo, Mr. Bygrove; I told you, you would ſoon ſee him ſettled in the world. Mr. Daſhwould, I thank you; I'll ſtep and confirm George in his reſolution. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

A good natured man, Sir John, and does not want credulity.

BYGROVE.

Ay! there, the moment his back is turned.

DASHWOULD.

Gulliver's Travels is a true hiſtory to him. His ſon has ſtrange flights. Firſt, he was to be a lawyer; bought chambers in the Temple, eat his commons, and was called to the bar. Then the law is a damned dry municipal ſtudy; the army is fitter for a gentleman; and as he was going to the War-office to take out his commiſſion, he ſaw my Lord Chancellor's coach go by; in an inſtant back to the Temple, and no ſooner there, "Po! pox! hang "the law; better marry, and live like a gentle-"man." Now marriage is a galling yoke, and he does not know what he'll do. He calls his man, Charles; ſends him away; walks about the room, ſits down, aſks a queſtion; thinks of ſomething elſe; talks to himſelf, ſings, whiſtles, lively, penſive, pleaſant, and melancholy in an inſtant. He approves, finds fault; he will, he will not; and in ſhort, the man does not know his own mind for half a ſecond. Here comes Sir John.

Enter

Enter Sir JOHN.

DASHWOULD.

You find him diſpoſed to marry, Sir John?

Sir JOHN.

I hope ſo; he wavers a little; but ſtill I——

BYGROVE.

Po! I have no patience; my advice has been all loſt upon you. I wiſh it may end well. A good morning, Sir John. (going)

DASHWOULD.

Mr. Bygrove, your's: Sir John will defend you in your abſence.

BYGROVE.

If you will forget your friends in their abſence, it is the greateſt favour you can beſtow upon them. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

Did I ever tell you what happened to him laſt ſummer, at Tunbridge?

Sir JOHN.

Excuſe me for the preſent. This light young man! I muſt ſtep, and talk with my lawyer.

DASHWOULD.

I'll walk part of the way with you. A ſtrange medley this ſame Mr. Bygrove: with ſomething like wit, wit, he is always abuſing wit.——You muſt know, laſt ſummer, at Tunbridge——

Sir JOHN.

Another time, if you pleaſe. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

The ſtory is worth your hearing: a party of us dined at the Suſſex—(following Sir John)

Enter CHARLES.

CHARLES.

Mr. Daſhwould! Mr. Daſhwould!

Re-enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

What's the matter, Charles?

CHARLES.

My maſter deſires you won't go.

Enter Sir HARRY.

Sir HARRY.

Hey! what going to leave us?

DASHWOULD.

Only a ſtep with Sir John. Strange vagaries in your maſter's head, Charles!—Sir Harry! going to wait upon Miſs Neville, I ſuppoſe. She has beauty, and you have a heart.

Sir

Sir HARRY.

Pſhaw! there you wrong me now! Why will you?

DASHWOULD.

Very well; be it ſo; I can't ſee to be ſure; but take my word for it, you will marry that girl. Come, I follow you.

Sir HARRY.

I muſt not part with you: I had rather loſe the whole College of Phyſicians. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

March on, Sir Harry.——(turns to Charles) Did you ever ſee ſuch a Baronet? This fellow, Charles, is as ridiculous himſelf as any of them. [Exit.

CHARLES.

Now have I but one man in the houſe, and he will be fifty different men in a moment. Hurry! hurry! nothing but hurry! Get me this; get me that; get me t'other; bring me the blue and ſilver; ſcoundrel! what do you fetch me this for? let me have the brown and gold. A poor ſervant does not know which way to turn himſelf in this houſe.

Enter RICHARD.

CHARLES.

Well, Richard, what are you about?

RI-

RICHARD.

Why a man in a whirlwind may as well tell what he is about. Going to order the coachman to put up. He intends to change his dreſs, and walk to the Temple. [Exit.

CHARLES.

What does he mean by talking of the Temple again? I hope we are not going to take to our ſtudies once more. I hate the law: there is not a footman in the Temple has a grain of taſte. All mere lawyers! They have not an idea out of the profeſſion.

Enter ROBERT.

ROBERT.

Richard! Richard! where is he gone?

CHARLES.

What's in the wind now?

ROBERT.

The wind's in another quarter. He has been writing verſes, as he calls them, ever ſince the company left him. He has torn a quire of paper, I believe, and now he wants the carriage directly.

[Exit.

CHARLES.

Run, and order it. I had rather be a country curate, than go on in this manner. (bell rings) What is he at now?

MIL-

MILLAMOUR. (within)

Charles:——who anſwers there?

CHARLES.

Ay; now for the old work.

Enter MILLAMOUR.

MILLAMOUR.

Is the chariot ready?

CHARLES.

At the door, Sir.

MILLAMOUR.

Do you ſtep to Mrs. Bromley's, and——perhaps it would be better to——No, do you ſtep, Charles, and——you need not mind it——another time will do as well. [Exit.

CHARLES.

There again now: this is the way from morning to night.

MILLAMOUR. (entering)

The ſooner, the better: I promiſed Sir John, and I will pay this viſit. Lady Bell reigns ſovereign of my heart. That vivacity of mind! "Quick as her "eyes, and as unfix'd as thoſe."

CHARLES.

She is by far preferable to her ſiſter, your Honour.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

Po!.. you are illiterate in theſe matters. The ſober graces of Lady Jane!—Lady Bell advances like a conqueror, and demands your heart: Lady Jane ſeems unconſcious of her charms, and yet enſlaves you deeper.

CHARLES.

Which of them does your Honour think—

MILLAMOUR.

Which of 'em, Charles? (reads a paper)
"I look'd, and I ſigh'd, and I wiſh'd I could ſpeak."

Enter ROBERT.

ROBERT.

Captain Bygrove, Sir.

MILLAMOUR.

That's unlucky. I am not at home; tell him I went out an hour ago.

Enter Captain BYGROVE.

MILLAMOUR.

My dear Bygrove, I longed to ſee you. But why that penſive air? Still in love, I ſuppoſe.

[Exeunt Charles and Robert.

Capt. BYGROVE.

My dear Millamour, you have gueſſed it. I am in love, and I glory in my chains.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

Shall I tell you a ſecret? I ſuſpect myſelf, plaguily. Every thing is not as quiet here as it uſed to be.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Indulge the happy paſſion. Let wits and libertines ſay what they will; there is no true happineſs, but in the married ſtate.

MILLAMOUR.

Why I have thought much upon the ſubject of late, and with a certain refinement, I don't know but a man may faſhion a complying girl to his taſte of happineſs. Virtuous himſelf, he confirms her in her virtue; conſtant, he ſecures her fidelity: and by continuing the lover, inſtead of commencing the tyrant huſband, he wins from her the ſweeteſt exertion of tenderneſs and love. I ſhall moſt poſitively marry. Who is your idol? My dear boy, impart.

Capt. BYGROVE.

There I beg to be excuſed. You know my father. I muſt not preſume to think for myſelf. I muſt contrive ſome ſtratagem to make him propoſe the match. Were it to move firſt from me, I ſhould be obliged to decamp from before the town at once.

MILLAMOUR.

I wiſh you ſucceſs. My reſolution is taken, and with the moſt amiable of her ſex. She romps about the room like one of the Graces; and deals about her wit with ſuch a happy negligence——

Capt.

Capt. BYGROVE.

An agreeable portrait, but mine is the very reverſe. That equal ſerenity in all her ways! Wit ſhe has, but without oſtentation; and elegance itſelf ſeems the pure effect of nature.

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

I don't know whether that is not the true character for a wife. And pray, what progreſs have you made in her affections?

Capt. BYGROVE.

Enough to convince me that I am not quite unacceptable. My dear Millamour, I had rather fold that girl in my arms, than kiſs his Majeſty's hand for the firſt regiment of guards.

MILLAMOUR.

I am a loſt man. I ſhall moſt poſitively marry. We will wonder at each others felicity; and be the envy of all our acquaintance.

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

I am as good as my word, you ſee. Moſt noble Captain, your father was here this morning. A good agreeable old gentleman, and about as pleaſant as a night mare. Millamour, whom do you think I met ſince I ſaw you?

MILLAMOUR.

Whom?

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

Our friend Beverley, juſt imported from Paris, perfectly frenchified, and abuſing every thing in this country—" Oh! there is no breathing their Engliſh atmoſphere.—Roaſt beef and liberty will be " the death of me."

MILLAMOUR.

Ha! ha! poor Beverley! I ſaw him, laſt ſummer, at Paris, dreſſed in the ſtile of an Engliſh fox-hunter: he ſwore there was not a morſel to eat in their country; kept an opera-ſinger upon beef-ſtakes and oyſter ſauce; drove to his villa every Saturday in a phaeton, and returned on the Monday, like a young buck, juſt come upon town.

DASHWOULD.

He has done his country great honour abroad.

BYGROVE.

He will ſettle at home now: he is going to be married.

DASHWOULD.

Yes, I hear he is in love, and much good may it do him. I wiſh I may die, if I know ſo ridiculous a thing as love.——" My life!——My ſoul!—— " Hybla dwells upon her lips; extaſy and bliſs! " blank verſe and paſtoral nonſenſe!" In a little time, the man wonders what bewitched him: an arm chair after dinner, and a box and dice till five in the morning, make all the comforts of his life.

MILLAMOUR.

Very true! Love is a ridiculous paſſion indeed.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Do you take up arms againſt me? But a moment ſince, juſt as you came in, he was acknowledging to me——

MILLAMOUR.

No, not I, truly; I acknowledge nothing. Marriage is not to my taſte, I promiſe you. The handſome wife!—ſhe is all affectation; routs, drums, hurricanes, and intrigue!

DASHWOULD.

And the ugly! ſhe makes it up with good ſenſe; pronounces upon wit; and talks you dead with maxims, characters, and reflections.

MILLAMOUR.

And the woman of high birth, ſhe produces her pedigree, as her patent for vice and folly. "Seven's the main," and away goes your whole fortune.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Mere common place.

DASHWOULD.

And the tender maukin! ſhe doats upon you. "Don't drink any more, my dear: you'll take cold "near that window, my love; pray don't talk ſo "much; you'll flurry your ſpirits"—And then kiſſes you before company.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

And the ſick madam! ſhe has the vapours, and finds that ſhe has nerves.——" I wiſh I had none.' ——" But it is too true that I have nerves,' as " ſlight as ſo many hairs."

DASHWOULD.

Ha! ha! the whole ſex is divided into ſo many claſſes of folly.

MILLAMOUR.

Right! ſo it is. Ha! ha! ha! (both laugh)

Capt. BYGROVE.

You play finely into one another's hands.

MILLAMOUR.

Now mark the champion of the ſex!—— } both laughing.

DASHWOULD.

Yes; he'll throw down the gauntlet for 'em. }

Capt. BYGROVE.

Nay, decide it your own way. Since you won't hear, gentlemen, there is a clear ſtage for you.

[Exit.

DASHWOULD.

Fare ye well, moſt noble Captain. A facetious companion! did you ever hear him ſay any thing?

MILLAMOUR.

He is in for it; and my father would fain reduce me to the ſame condition with one of Mrs. Bromley's nieces. A good fine woman, Mrs. Bromley!

DASHWOULD.

Has been! Were ſhe now to rub her cheek with a white handkerchief, her roſes and lillies would go to the clear ſtarcher.

MILLAMOUR.

Ha! ha! and yet ſhe ſets up for the rival of her nieces.

DASHWOULD.

The young ladies are pretty well in their way too. Lady Bell has a briſk volubility of nothing, that ſhe plays the pretty ideot with: and Lady Jane, a fly piece of formality, ready to go poſt for Scotland, with the firſt red-coat that aſks her the queſtion. We all dine at the Widow's to day, are you to be with us?

MILLAMOUR.

Yes, to meet you: the party will be diverting.

DASHWOULD.

Obſerve old Bygrove. He pronounces with rigour upon the conduct of others, and hopes his own follies lie concealed. His whole ſtruggle is to eſcape detection. He hoodwinks himſelf, and thinks he blinds you. Poſitive and dogmatical in his opinions, yet a dupe to the deſigns of others; and flattering himſelf that a peeviſh and cenſorious ſpirit hides every defect, he gives you the full ridicule of his character.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

I have marked him before now.

DASHWOULD.

Mark him with the widow: you will ſee him ſighing for his deceaſed wife and Mrs. Bromley's charms at the ſame time. One eye ſhall weep for the dead, and the other ogle the living.

MILLAMOUR.

Ha! ha!——And then Malvil laying ſiege to Miſs Neville!

DASHWOULD.

Miſs Neville is the beſt of them. Mrs. Bromley has taken her into her houſe, as a poor relation, whom ſhe pities; and her pity is no more than the cruel art of tormenting an unhappy dependant upon her generoſity.

MILLAMOUR.

But ſhe has generoſity. She has promiſed Miſs Neville a fortune of five thouſand pounds.

DASHWOULD.

And ſo the hook is baited for Malvil. The widow flings out that ſnare, to counteract Sir Harry.

MILLAMOUR.

Sir Harry!

DASHWOULD.

Yes; he is in love with Miſs Neville; and the beſt of the ſtory is, he is afraid I ſhall think him ridiculous. If I ſay the word, and promiſe not to laugh at him, he breaks his mind at once. Miſs Neville ſees clearly that he admires her, and of courſe will never liſten to Malvil. The ſelf intereſted deſigns of that fellow ſhall be diſappointed.

MILLAMOUR.

Admirable! thou art a whimſical fellow. Come, I attend you. A pleaſant group they are all together. It is as you ſay,

Our paſſions ſicken, and our pleaſures cloy;
A fool to laugh at, is the height of joy.

[Exeunt.

End of the FIRST ACT.

ACT

ACT the SECOND.

Scene at Mrs. BROMLEY's.

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY, and Miſs NEVILLE.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

WHY, to be ſure, Neville, there is ſomething in what you ſay: one is ſo odd, and ſo I don't know how in a morning.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Certainly, madam; and then people of your turn, whoſe wit overflows in converſation, are liable to a waſte of ſpirits, and the alteration appears ſooner in them.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

So it does: you obſerve very prettily upon things. Heigho! I am as faded as an old luteſtring to-day.

Miſs NEVILLE.

No indeed, madam, you look very tolerably, conſidering.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (aſide)

Conſidering! ſhe grows pert, I think.——I am glad you think me not altogether intolerable.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Ma'am!

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Tolerably! ſhe is Lady Bell's prime agent. (aſide) Has Sir Harry given you hopes lately?

Miſs NEVILLE.

Sir Harry! I really don't underſtand why he is mentioned.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Do you think it will be a match? And have you made up your quarrel with Lady Bell? (ſits down)

Miſs NEVILLE.

The ſweetneſs of her diſpoſition reconciles every thing.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

And is Millamour reconciled to Lady Bell?

Miſs NEVILLE.

There was only a ſlight miſtake, which I explained.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Oh! you explained? that was prudently done; I am glad to hear this: and do you think he loves her? Tell me; tell me all. Why? why do you think he loves her?

Miſs NEVILLE.

He cannot be inſenſible of her merit; and the other day he aſked me if you were likely to approve of his propoſing for Lady Bell.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

And you told him, ——Well!——what did you tell him?

Miſs NEVILLE.

That you, no doubt, would be ready to promote the happineſs of ſo amiable a young lady.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

You told him ſo? (riſes, and walks about) And ſo you are turned match-maker: you buſy yourſelf in my family?——Hey!——Mrs. Start-up! you are dizened out, I think: my wardrobe has ſupplied you.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Your pardon, ma'am: I had theſe things in the country, when you firſt ſhewed ſo much goodneſs to me.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

What airs! you know I hate to ſee creatures give themſelves airs. Was not I obliged to provide you with every thing?

Miſs NEVILLE.

You have been very kind; I always acknowledge it.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Acknowledge it! Does not every body know it?

Miſs

Miſs NEVILLE.

Yes, ma'am, I dare ſay every body does know it.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

That's maliciouſly ſaid: I can ſpy a ſneer upon that falſe face. You ſuppoſe I have made my brags, That's what lurks in your ambiguous meaning. I deſerve it: deliver me from poor relations.

Miſs NEVILLE. (aſide)

Now the ſtorm begins! I am ſure I have ſaid nothing to offend you. I am helpleſs, it is true, but your relation, and by that tie a gentlewoman ſtill.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I made you a gentlewoman. Did not I take you up in the country, where you lived in the parſonage-houſe, you, and your ſiſter, with no other company to converſe with, than the melancholy tomb-ſtones, where you read the high and mighty characters of John Hodge, and Deborah his wife? While your father's miſerable horſe, worn to a ſhadow with carrying double to the next market-town, limped about, with a dull alms-begging eye in queſt of the wretched ſuſtenance, that grew thriftily between the graves? Did not I take you out of your miſery?

Miſs NEVILLE.

You did, ma'am. (in a ſoftened tone)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Did not I bring you home to the great houſe?

Miſs

Miſs NEVILLE.

You did, ma'am! (weeps aſide)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

And I am finely thanked for it. Warm the ſnake, and it will turn upon you.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I cannot bear to be inſulted thus! (aſide)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

So! your ſpirit is humbled, is it?

Miſs NEVILLE.

Give me leave to tell you, madam, that when people of ſuperior fortune, whom Providence has enabled to beſtow obligations, claim a right, from the favours they confer, to tyrannize over the hopes and fears of a mind in diſtreſs; they exerciſe a cruelty more barbarous than any in the whole hiſtory of human malice.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Is this your gratitude?

Miſs NEVILLE.

I could be thankful for happineſs, if you permitted me to enjoy it: but when I find myſelf under colour of protection, made the ſport of every ſudden whim; I have a ſpirit, madam, that can diſtinguiſh between real benevolence, and the price of riches.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

O brave! that is your ſpirit!

Miſs NEVILLE.

A ſpirit, give me leave to ſay, that would rather, in any obſcure corner, ſubmit to drudgery, for a ſlender pittance, than continue to be an unhappy ſubject, for cruelty to try its experiments upon.

(weeps)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I fancy I have been too violent. After all this ſower, I muſt ſweeten her a little. Come, dry up your tears: you know I am good-natured in the main. I am only jealous, that you don't ſeem to love me.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Were that left to my own heart, every principle there would attach me to you. But to be dunned for gratitude!——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

You are right; the obſervation is very juſt: I am in the wrong.——Come, let us be friends, I have a great regard for you, Neville. (walks aſide) The creature ſhould viſit with me, only ſhe looks ſo well.——How! did not I hear Mr. Malvil's voice? yes, it is he; I am viſible; I am at home; ſhew him in. Walk in, Mr. Malvil.

Enter

Enter MALVIL.

MALVIL.

To a perſon of ſentiment; like you, madam, a viſit is paid with pleaſure.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

You are very good to me. Neville, do you ſtep and bring me the letter that lies upon my table. (Exit Miſs Neville) I am obliged to go out this morning. (ſmiles at Malvil) She looks mighty well: I have been ſpeaking for you: our ſcheme will take. Sir Harry will not be able to rival you: ſhe will be your reward for all your ſervices to me.

MALVIL.

Your generoſity is above all praiſe, and ſo I was ſaying this moment to Mr. Bygrove: he is coming to wait on you.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

That's unlucky: I wanted to have ſome talk with you: well, have you ſeen Millamour?

MALVIL.

Yes, and I find him apt: I have hopes of ſucceeding.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Huſh!—not ſo loud!—you think me mad, I believe. May I hazard myſelf with that wild man?

MAL-

MALVIL.

Your virtue will reclaim him. I have a friendſhip for Millamour, and that is my reaſon for counteracting the deſigns of my friend Bygrove.—Mr. Bygrove has deſired me to ſpeak favourably of him to your ladyſhip.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Oh! but he kept his laſt wife mew'd up in the country; I ſhould certainly expire in the country.

MALVIL.

Why, I can't ſay much for a country life! you are perfectly right. Rooks and crows about your houſe; fox-hounds in full cry all the morning; the country 'ſquires as noiſy at dinner as their own hounds; diſputes about the game; commiſſioners of turnpikes, juſtices of the peace, and pedigrees of horſes; "Oroonoko, brother to White Surry, got by Briſk "Lightning, his dam by Bold Thunder."—That's the whole of their converſation.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Deliver me! it would be the death of me. But don't tell Mr. Bygrove: amuſe him with hopes.

MALVIL.

He is a very worthy man. I am ſorry to ſee ſome oddities in him; but that is very common in life. Vices always border upon virtues. Daſhwould ſays, ---but there is no believing his ſlander;---he ſays Mr. Bygrove's ſorrow for his deceaſed wife, is all mere artifice, to weep himſelf into the good graces of another. But I don't believe it.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I hear him coming. Do you go and take care of your intereſt with Neville.

MALVIL.

I obey your commands. (going)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I ſhall make her fortune five thouſand. Be ſure you ſpeak to Millamour. Go, go; ſucceſs attend you.

[Exit MALVIL.

Enter BYGROVE.

BYGROVE. (bowing)

Madam!

Mrs. BROMLEY.

This attention to one in my forlorn ſtate is ſo obliging——

BYGROVE.

It is a favour on your part to receive a loſt, dejected, ſprightleſs——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I admire your ſenſibility, Mr. Bygrove. That tender look, which you are for ever caſting back to a beloved, but irrecoverable object, ſhews ſo amiable a ſorrow! oh! there is ſomething exquiſite in virtuous affection.

Enter

Enter Miſs NEVILLE.

Is this the letter you want, Madam? (gives it her)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I thank you, Neville. Yes, there is a luxury in hankering after a valuable perſon, who has been ſnatched away. I have found a pleaſing indulgence in contemplations of that ſort; have not I, Neville?

Miſs NEVILLE.

Ma'am!

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Ma'am! are you deaf? Are you ſtupid? I was telling Mr. Bygrove, what a taking I was in, when poor dear Mr. Bromley died.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I was not with you then, Ma'am.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Was not with me! what memories ſome folks have!—Go, and try if you can recover your memory: leave the room.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Ungenerous, narrow minded woman! [Exit.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Oh! you little know what a profuſion of goodneſs I have laviſhed on that creature. She returns it all with ſullenneſs, with ill-humour, with averſion. She perfectly remembers the affliction I was in, when I loſt the beſt of men.

By-

BYGROVE.

I have had my trials too. Heigho!

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I beg your pardon: I am recalling your afflictions: you ſhould not give way; you ſhould ſtruggle a little. Heaven knows how I have ſtruggled. I have appeared, indeed, with an air, but it was all ſtruggling. (looks, and ſmiles) I could divert you this morning. Do you know that your ſon is in love with Lady Jane?

BYGROVE.

In love! has he ſaid any thing?

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I don't know as to that; but I can ſee what is working in his heart. He is above ſtairs now: I don't half like his choice: Lady Bell is the proper match for him, and her fortune is the beſt. An eſtate, you know, muſt come to her, by the family ſettlement. You ſhould direct his choice.

BYGROVE.

This comes of his preſuming to think for himſelf. Has he declared himſelf?

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I fancy not; but he hinted ſomething to me, about a match in my family.

BYGROVE. (looks at her, and ſmiles)

Why, a match in your family has diverted me of late—Heigho!—It is the only thing that has entertained me for a long time.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I have had my fancies too. I ſhould like to talk further, but I am engaged abroad, this morning. Can I ſet you down? Will you truſt yourſelf with me?

BYGROVE.

You encourage a ſmile, Madam.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

We ſhall be the town talk: but let them talk: what need we mind? I will juſt ſtep and ſay a word to Neville—You ſhould not be too ſolitary.

BYGROVE.

So my friends tell me.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I ſhall be with you in a moment. (returns) Do you know that we are very like each other in our tempers? After all, that is the true foundation of laſting friendſhips. Poor, dear Mr. Bromley! (going, returns) It was ſimilitude of temper brought us together; and if ever I could be prevailed upon again, ſimilitude of temper muſt do it. Well, you have diverted me this morning. Here comes your ſon, talk to him now. [Exit.

Enter Captain BYGROVE.

BYGROVE.

Well, Sir, what brings you to this houſe?

Capt.

Capt. BYGROVE.

A morning viſit, Sir; merely to kill half an hour.

BYGROVE.

There is nothing I hate ſo much as hypocriſy. I know your errand; you muſt pretend to be in love.

Capt. BYGROVE.

I, Sir!

BYGROVE.

What have you been ſaying to Lady Jane? I thought I had cautioned you againſt preſuming to think for yourſelf.

Capt. BYGROVE.

You have been very kind in that way.

BYGROVE.

See what comes of your friend Millamour's being left to his own diſcretion. The aſs in the fable, divided in his choice, and ſtill doubting on, till it is too late to reſolve, gives but a faint image of him.

Capt. BYGROVE.

And if I, Sir, to avoid his irreſolution——

BYGROVE.

You are in the oppoſite extreme: he thinks too much, and never decides. You never think at all, and ſo reſolve without judgement. Take the advice of your friends before you come here to play the antic tricks of love; to kneel, cringe, fawn, flatter, and make yourſelf ridiculous. Do you know enough of the world to judge for yourſelf? Can you tell what they are all doing in the gay ſphere of life? The young are all bred up under the veterans of vice and folly. They ſee their mothers with autumnal faces, playing the agreeable, and forgeting that they are no longer young. The men are advanced beyond all former bounds, and the women preſs cloſe after them. A club for the ladies! intrepidity is now the female charm: to compleat their career, there is nothing left but to build a turf Coterie, at Newmarket, and ride their own matches, over the four mile courſe.

Capt. BYGROVE.

An admirable picture, Sir; Daſhwould could not colour it higher.

BYGROVE.

Daſhwould! an indiſcriminate railer! I ſpeak for your good, and remember, I tell you, you know nothing of the world. After all, Sir; Lady Bell is the perſon I wiſh to ſee you married to;—go, and pay your addreſſes to her. I will ſettle that matter for you: you may then marry the perſon, to whom you have not degraded yourſelf, by pining, ſighing, love verſes, and I know not what.

Capt. BYGROVE.

This is all unaccountable to me, Sir. If you will but hear me——

Enter MALVIL.

BYGROVE.

No, Sir, no; I won't allow you to fetch a ſingle ſigh,

ſigh, till I ſay the word; when I give leave, you may then go and ſigh till your heart is ready to break. I'll hear no more; no parlying with me. Leave the houſe, this moment.

Capt. BYGROVE.

I obey. [Exit.

MALVIL.

I interrupt you.

BYGROVE.

No, no; I am glad to ſee you. Well, have you had any opportunity with the widow?

MALVIL.

I have; ſhe ſurprizes me a little: ſhe has dropt the maſk. I did not think ſhe had been ſo eager to marry. We had ſome talk about you. You know my heart: I am always true to my friends: I ſee but one difficulty: ſhe will never agree to live in the country.

BYGROVE.

The lover need not diſpute that point, whatever the huſband may do hereafter.

MALVIL.

Very true; and beſides, though I am not inclined, with the malicious part of the world, to ſuſpect her virtue, yet this town has temptations. It grieves me to ſee the ways of this great city; fine women without principle; friends without ſincerity: marriages to day, divorces to-morrow; whole eſtates ſet upon the caſt of a die; maſquerades without wit or humour; new comedies that make you cry, and tragedies that put you to ſleep: It grieves me to ſee all this. You are in the right to prefer good ſenſe and tranquility in the country.

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY, and Miſs NEVILLE.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I beg your pardon, gentlemen. Neville, mind what I ſay to you: don't let thoſe giddy girls go out in my abſence; to walk in the Green Park, or run to hideous painters, under pretence of ſeeing odious pictures, that they may have an interview with more odious originals. Keep them at home; I will reward your pains. Allons,, Mr. Bygrove. (Exit BYGROVE.) Come, Mr. Malvil.

MALVIL.

Had not I better ſtay, and——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

No, no; come now, you may return to her.

[Exit.

MALVIL. (to Miſs NEVILLE.)

You ſee that I am torn from you; but I ſhall return as ſoon as poſſible. [Exit.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Tyrannical woman! ſome virtues ſhe has; but they are overſhadowed by their oppoſite qualities. Her love of praiſe, is a groſs appetite of flattery.

She

She oppreſſes with kindneſs, and her very civilities are ſure to be diſobliging. Oh! ſtate of dependance! for mere ſupport, to be ſubject every hour to caprice and arrogance!—Is it pride that makes me feel with this ſenſibillty?—No, my heart can anſwer it is not. I can bow to the hand that relieves me; but I cannot ſtoop to the ſervile office of pampering vanity and oſtentation, with low and fulſome flattery. What does Lady Bell mean by talking to me of Sir Harry? She does it——I know her goodneſs——ſhe does it to ſoften affliction, and, if poſſible, divert a mind, depreſſed with ſorrow. Sir Harry never threw away a thought on me. He behaves, indeed, with marked civility; but I don't know what to think of him. I muſt not aſpire too high: no, I have no pretenſions.

Enter Lady JANE.

Lady JANE.

Miſs Neville, I am very angry with you. What is the matter? Has any thing made you uneaſy?

Miſs NEVILLE.

No; I am not remarkable for high ſpirits, you know.

Lady JANE.

Why would not you give us your company? How can you be ſo croſs? That ſiſter of mine is the verieſt madcap!

Miſs NEVILLE.

Lady Bell is rather lively to be ſure.

Lady JANE.

But when ſhe once begins, ſhe hazards every thing, and talks ſometimes like a very libertine.

Miſs NEVILLE.

The overflowing of gaiety, and good humour.

Lady JANE.

I wiſh ſhe would reſtrain herſelf a little. Madam La Rouge is with her : ſhe has the ſweeteſt Point eyes ever beheld. I was endeavouring to cheapen it, but Lady Bell was ſo troubleſome ; ſhe called me a thouſand prudes, and will have it that nothing runs in my head, but a lover.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I don't know but ſhe may be right. We are apt to deceive ourſelves. We talk of vapours, and fidgets, and retirement, but it is often artful, ſly, inſinuating man, that lurks at the bottom.

Lady JANE.

Well, I vow you'll make me hate you.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Has Captain Bygrove made no diſturbance in your heart ?

Lady JANE.

How can you ? You are as great a plague as my ſiſter. As I live and breathe, the giddy romp is coming. You muſt take my part.

Enter

Enter Lady BELL.

Lady BELL. (repeating)

Yes, I'm in love, I own it now,
And Cœlia has undone me;
And yet, I ſwear, I can't tell how,
The pleaſing plague ſtole on me.

What would I give to have ſome miſerable ſwain talk in that ſtyle of me? "Belinda has undone me;" charming!

Miſs NEVILLE.

A lively imagination is a bleſſing, and you are happy, Lady Bell.

Lady BELL.

I am ſo: but then I am not talked of: I am loſing all my time.

Lady JANE.

Why, you bold creature! I hate to hear you talk with ſo much intrepidity.

Lady BELL.

Prudery! my dear ſiſter, downright prudery! I am not for making myſteries of what all the world knows.

Lady JANE.

And how do I make myſteries pray?

Lady

Lady BELL.

Why, you confident thing, I'll prove it againſt you.

Lady JANE.

But what? what? what will you prove?

Lady BELL.

That you are ready to jump out of your little wits for a huſband, my demure, ſober ſiſter. Miſs Neville, a poet is not more eager for the ſucceſs of a new comedy, nor one of his brother poets more deſirous to ſee it fail, than that girl is to throw herſelf into the arms of a man.

Lady JANE.

All ſcandal, ſiſter.

Lady BELL.

Miſs Neville ſhall be judge.

Lady JANE.

Your ſtory is mere invention.

Lady BELL.

Was there ever ſuch a wrangler?

Lady JANE.

You'll not make good your words.

Lady BELL. (pats her hand)

Hold your tongue, Miſs, will you?

Lady JANE.

Very well, go on.

Lady

Lady BELL.

Will you have done? Now mind, Miſs Neville. She does not want to be married, ſhe ſays. The other night, my young madam, whoſe thoughts are always compoſed and even, went to ſleep as ſoon as we got to bed, and then her buſy imagination went to work with all the vivacity of an intriguing chamber-maid.

Lady JANE.

And how can you tell that, pray?

Lady BELL.

Out of your own mouth you ſhall be judged. Miſs Neville, ſhe talked in her ſleep, like a beauty in a ſide box, and then fell a ſinging,

No, no; he is true, and I believe;
He look'd, he ſigh'd, he can't deceive;
No, no; I have conquer'd; he is mine;
My heart is touch'd, and I reſign.

Lady JANE.

Oh! you ſcurrilous creature.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Fairly caught, Lady Jane.

Lady JANE.

All odious ſlander; you judge of me by yourſelf.

Lady BELL.

I do ſo. I mean to be married, and am frank enough to own it. But you may let "concealment feed feed on your damaſk cheek." My damaſk cheek, I hope, was made for other purpoſes.

Lady JANE.

Gracious! there is no bearing this. What a mad girl you are!

Lady BELL.

Not in the leaſt. A natural character. One would not, to be ſure, tell a hideous man that one loves him: but when one has encouraged him by degrees, and drawn him on, like a new glove, and perhaps done him a miſchief in the doing it, why then one would draw him off again, and may be aſk a pretty fellow to help a body; and then the wretch looks ſo piteous, and kneels at your feet; then riſes in a jealous fit. "I take my everlaſting farewell; never "to return; no, never; what to her? who encou- "raged me? encouraged him? who promiſed? "broke her promiſe? The treacherous, faithleſs, "dear, deluding"——then returns in an inſtant; hands dangling; eyes imploring; tongue faultering; "Lady Bell,—Lady Bell—when you know that I "adore you"——And I burſt out into a fit of laughter in his face: oh! that's my joy, my triumph, my ſupreme delight.

Lady JANE.

And is not there a kind of cruelty in all this?

Lady BELL.

Oh! your very humble ſervant, my ſweet Lady Graveairs. Cruelty! The difference between you and me, ſiſter, is this; you deny your love to your female friends, and own it to the man; now I deny it

it to him, but among ourſelves, I fairly own that Miſs Neville is not more impatient to be married to Sir Harry, than I to——

Miſs NEVILLE.

Who, I? Spare me, I beg of you. Why Sir Harry?

Lady JANE.

Now, now, your turn is come. Never ſpare her, ſiſter?

Miſs NEVILLE.

You muſt excuſe me, I am not in ſpirits for all this raillery. (going)

Lady JANE.

You ſhan't leave us.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Give me leave; I beg you will. I'll go and talk to Madam La Rouge. Perhaps I may ſucceed for you. [Exit.

Lady JANE.

Well, if you muſt go.—How you run on, ſiſter! And are you really in love?

Lady BELL.

Over head and ears.

Lady JANE.

With whom?

Lady

Lady BELL.

Not with Capt. Bygrove: how alarmed you are! With Millamour, ſiſter.

Lady JANE.

Fix that roving temper, if you can; he will be on his knees to you, and the firſt pair of black eyes that enters the room will be through his heart.

Lady BELL.

As to that, I give myſelf very little trouble: but if I could once catch him paying his adoration to me, my aunt Bromley does not raiſe and ſink poor Miſs Neville's ſpirits with ſuch exquiſite ſkill in the art of tormenting, as I ſhould his. I ſhould uſe him as the men do their punch; a little more ſweet; a little more ſower; a little more ſpirit; more acid again; then perhaps ſay it's good for nothing, and then, perhaps——

Lady JANE.

What?

Lady BELL.

Sip it up at laſt, as you would do at firſt. You wicked girl, how could you aſk me ſuch a queſtion? Law! what am I about? I have a thouſand things to do.

Enter Miſs NEVILLE, and Madam LA ROUGE.

LA ROUGE.

Ah! my Lady! always ſo gay; Engliſh climate no no effect upon you. De manieres de Paris for all de vorl. En verite, vous eſt charmante.

Lady BELL.

Oh! Madam La Rouge, you ſay ſuch polite things; but you rob me of all my money. My ſiſter is rich: you had better deal with her. Siſter, you'll be married before me. (ſings)

" No, no, he is true, and I believe, &c. [Exit.

Lady JANE.

Was ever any thing ſo crazy?

LA ROUGE.

It is all vivacite! and, my Lady, you have ver great wit en partage; vous avez les graces; you have de grace; but you no deal vid me.

Lady JANE.

I ſhall call at your houſe in Pall-mall. Miſs Neville, you joined againſt me, I am very angry with you. [Exit.

LA ROUGE.

Mademoiſelle, I tell you; perſuade my Lady to have de lace, and you come to my houſe, me give you ver pretty preſent.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Oh! you have a national talent for applying a little bribery.

LA

La Rouge.

Diantre; 'tis falſe delicateſſe. You not know de manieres of the vorl.—Ah! Monſieur Malvil!

Enter Malvil.

Malvil.

Madam La Rouge. I did not expect this pleaſure.

La Rouge.

It is always pleaſure to ſee mes amis; to ſee my friends; and I glad to ſee you here vid de Lady. You have ver good choice. And I can tell you, make de diſpatch: you have rival.

Malvil.

Rival!

La Rouge.

You not know? Sir Harry have taſte as well as you. Madamoiſelle, you are ver great favourite.

Miſs Neville.

A favourite! keep your vivacity for ſome other ſubject: don't make me the town talk.

La Rouge.

It is ver true: He come to my houſe in Pall-mall, and ſay ver fine ting of Madamoiſelle Neville, and Monſieur Daſhwould praiſe you ver much.

Malvil. (aſide)

Ay, his malice is at work.

La

LA ROUGE.

Monſieur, you loſe all your time—(goes to him and ſpeaks low.) You wait de fortune from Madam Bromley: Sir Harry vil take her vidout any money at all. Vat you ſlow for?

MALVIL.

Are the apartments kept ready at your houſe?

LA ROUGE.

De apartment it is ready. You take it two, tree week ago, and pay de rent for noting———I leave you vid de lady; and I go mind mes affaires. Bon voyage. [Exit.

MALVIL.

I have diſengaged myſelf, to have the honour of attending you.

MISS NEVILLE.

Your attention is thrown away. Did not I hear Mr. Millamour's voice?

MALVIL.

Yes; he came with me; he is gone into the next room to pay his compliments to Lady Jane. I am ſorry to ſee him for ever diſtracted; always reſolving, and yet every day beginning the world over again. You look chagrin'd, what has diſturb'd you?

MISS NEVILLE.

The old ſtory; Mrs. Bromley's eternal whims.

MALVIL.

She is not ſpoken of as I could wiſh. Good natured and arrogant, generous and cruel, obliging and oppreſſive, at the ſame time.

Miſs NEVILLE.

There cannot, ſurely, be a more diſtreſsful ſituation than to remain under daily obligations, and yet not be able to eſteem our benefactreſs.

MALVIL.

Your delicacy charms me: It has fixed me yours. I long for nothing ſo much, as to ſee you out of her power. They have a ſtrange report about town: people will be talking: the whiſper goes that Mr. Bygrove, amidſt all his grief, is ſtily in a hurry for another wife. Mrs. Bromley they ſay, encourages him; and at the ſame time has a deſign upon my friend Millamour.

Miſs NEVILLE.

The world is not always wrong.

MALVIL.

Malice will be buſy; and does not ſpare the young ladies.

Miſs NEVILLE.

If any thing is ſaid to their diſadvantage, believe me, they do not deſerve it.

MALVIL.

I dare ſay not: I don't think they are too forward.

I am

I am ſorry to ſee, in one of the papers, to-day, a character of Sir Harry, not at all favourable. His little follies, his whims, and caprices one does not mind: He may walk in Daſhwould's train as long as he pleaſes; that only makes him ridiculous. But it grieves me to hear that perfidy ſtains his character, and, as I am told, the worſt of perfidy: the ruin of beauty and innocence, is his ruling paſſion.

Miſs NEVILLE.

This is very odd: ſomebody has been at the trouble of ſending me an anonymous letter to that very effect: and why to me? I am not able to decypher.

MALVIL.

I don't like anonymous letters. In general they aim at miſchief, but this perhaps, is meant as a caution to you: it muſt be a friend that ſent it.

Miſs NEVILLE.

No; I can gueſs the quiver from whence that arrow comes.

MALVIL.

Daſhwould, perhaps?

Miſs NEVILLE.

I don't ſay that.

MALVIL.

Nor I; I never charge any body; but upon recollection, the letter in the news-paper is imputed to him. Mrs. Bromley, I know, has no opinion of Sir Harry. His deſigns, with regard to you, ſhe does not think honourable. My heart intereſts me for yeu. You know I am all hearr. The plan which Mrs. Bromley has propoſed——Hark! I think I hear Millamour coming. I'll follow you up ſtairs.

Miſs Neville.

Oh! Sir! you have frighten'd me out of my wits. [Exit.

Malvil.

She loves Sir Harry, I ſee; and yet ſhe ſhan't ſlip thro' my hands. I can ſet on Mrs. Bromley to lead her a weary life, and if I can prevail upon Millamour to renounce Lady Bell, and marry the widow, my buſineſs is done. When Miſs Neville is heartily tormented by Mrs. Bromley, affliction ſoftens the mind, and I may then decoy her away, and ſtand upon terms with the family. But Daſhwould's wit will fly about. No matter: he is a ſad ſcoundrel, and does not mind how he murders reputations. So! here comes Millamour. I muſt get clear of him, and talk further with Miſs Neville.

Enter Millamour.

Millamour.

From this moment I blot all other woman from my memory. Malvil, wiſh me joy. The perplexity of choice is now at an end.

Malvil.

Why, what has happen'd?

Millamour.

Lovely Lady Jane. And yield her charms of mind mind with ſweet delay."—I can't ſtay to tell you now.

MALVIL.

Nor will I ſtay to interrupt your raptures. You know, I wiſh you ſucceſs. [Exit.

Enter Lady BELL.

Lady BELL. (reading)

Who yields too ſoon, muſt ſoon her lover loſe,
Would you reſtrain him long? then long refuſe.

MILLAMOUR. (looks at her, and ſmiles.)

There is ſomething commanding in that air of vivacity.

Lady BELL. (reads)

" Oft at your door let him for entrance wait,
There let him———

How! Millamour here! how could you ſurprize me ſo? You horrid thing! how long have you been here?

MILLAMOUR.

Been, Madam?—I have been—I have been in the next room, paying my reſpects to your ſiſter.

Lady BELL.

And never enquired for poor Lady Bell?

MILLAMOUR.

Your Ladyſhip wrongs me. You do injuſtice to your own charms: they can never be forgot.

Lady BELL.

I ſee how it is: the other day you was liſted in my ſervice, and now a deſerter to my ſiſter! you are right, you would have been upon hard duty with me.

MILLAMOUR.

Any duty but a forlorn hope would be——

Lady BELL.

Hope!—why ſure, you would not have had the intolerable aſſurance, to entertain the ſmalleſt degree of hope? My ſiſter, I ſuppoſe, has given you ſome hope. Ay! that's her way: She moves by ſettled rules, and ſhines with equal light. Now I——I am a mere comet, I blaze of a ſudden; dazzle for a while, then wheel away, and am thought of no more.

MILLAMOUR.

That gaiety of hers is charming. (aſide) The impreſſion your ladyſhip makes——

Lady BELL.

Words; mere words;—No; I am a ſtrange piece of wild nature; never the ſame for two minutes together. Now, my ſiſter, ſhe is a Pruſſian blue, holds her colour, and is always the ſame.—I—I am a more changeable ſilk—I ſhift about, and diſplay my wit, and my folly, ſo curiouſly blended, that no body can tell where one begins, or the other ends. I am not worth your notice. (walks, and hums a tune)

MIL-

MILLAMOUR. (looking at her)

She has deſcribed herſelf admirably; without variety, a woman is a downright piece of inſipidity.

Lady BELL.

Yes; I have my whims. Never the ſame for two minutes together. Now I love to give a ſcope to folly, and the men ſay, "curſe catch her, ſhe pleaſes more, when in the wrong, than other women when they are in the right. Then good ſenſe is the word; and the next moment I can't bear the fatigue of thinking; why won't ſomebody write a comedy to divert me? Then all ſpirit, and I long to lead up the ball."

Ladies, like variegated tulips ſhow,
'Tis to their weakneſs all their charms they owe.
(ſings, and walks about.)

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

Lady Jane is mere mediocrity compared to her.

Lady BELL.

Lord! I run on at a ſtrange rate. Yours, Mr. Millamour: Au revoir. (going)

MILLAMOUR.

A moment longer: you muſt not leave me. You poſſeſs my heart: poſſeſs it without a rival.

Lady BELL.

Hey! what's the matter now?

MILLAMOUR.

Do not trifle with a paſſion ſincere as mine. I adore you, my Lady Bell; adore your matchleſs charms; thus on my knees adore.

Lady Bell.

Stay, ſtay; let me ſee what the poet ſays, (reads quick.)

Oft at your door, let him for entrance wait,
There let him kneel, and threaten and entreat.

There, ſtay there; don't offer to ſtir. Now put up both your hands, and pray, pray, have compaſſion, Lady Bell. [Exit, laughing.

Millamour.

She flies diſdainful from her lover's view,
Yet looks and bids him, as ſhe flies, purſue.

End of the SECOND ACT.

ACT

ACT the THIRD.

Enter Lady JANE, and Capt. BYGROVE.

Lady JANE.

AND laid his commands upon you to addreſs my ſiſter?

Capt. BYGROVE.

Moſt peremptorily.

Lady JANE.

You have obey'd him, I hope.

Capt. BYGROVE.

You know your power too well; you know that I am devoted to you, and that my happineſs depends upon the promiſe you have made me.

Lady JANE.

There, that is always the way with you men: our ſmiles, are ſure marks of approbation; and every civil thing we ſay, is conſtrued into a promiſe.

Capt. BYGROVE.

And have not you promiſed?

Lady JANE. (looks at him, and ſmiles)

Need I anſwer that queſtion? How eaſily frightened you are! but you have ſome reaſon to be alarmed. Millamour, has been on his knees to me, breathing ſuch raptures——

Capt.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Ay!—who has ſet him on?—what can be at the bottom of this?—And have you liſtened to him?—Here comes Daſhwould; he perhaps can explain—

Lady JANE.

He will only laugh at us; and ſo I'll make my eſcape. (going)

Capt. BYGROVE.

Not to hear Millamour, again, I hope. (takes her hand.)

Lady JANE.

Well, well, to purchaſe my liberty, you need not fear. I have received his vows, delivered with ſuch ardour!—how terrified you look?——I have liſtened to him, to alarm my ſiſter with an idea of Millamour's growing paſſion for me. If her jealouſy is once touched, it may fix her reſolution. At preſent, ſhe is as volatile as Millamour himſelf.

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

As volatile as Millamour! what can that be? I never knew any thing that would bear a compariſon.

Lady JANE.

What think you of my ſiſter?

DASHWOULD.

Lady Bell has her whims. I left her above ſtairs, in cloſe conference with Millamour; he has deſerted your Ladyſhip already. Mrs Bromley will be the next, next, I hope: your father, Captain, would grieve more for that, than for his deceaſed wife.

Lady JANE.

And then Miſs Neville's turn may come.

DASHWOULD.

Oh! no. To ſport with her would be inhumanity. But a briſk widow, is fair game.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Yes, and it may help to cure my father of his folly.

Lady JANE.

It would be ſport, but I deſpair of it. You know, Mr. Daſhwould, you allow that Millamour has underſtanding.

DASHWOULD.

But he does not act from his underſtanding. Fits and ſtarts of paſſion govern him. If in any one purſuit of real uſe, he had half the alacrity of mind, with which he runs on, from one folly to another, he would be a man for the ladies to pull caps for. But he lives for ever in inconſiſtencies. One action of his life is the ſure forerunner of the contrary. Firſt Malvil is his favourite! then arm in arm with me. Can any two things be more oppoſite? It is the ſame among the ladies! they all have him by turns, and the whim of one moment, is ſure to find a ridiculous antitheſis in the next.

Lady JANE.

He ſat for that picture, I'll ſwear.—Well there's a gentleman wants your advice, and ſo I'll leave you together. [Exit.

Capt. BYGROVE.

My dear Daſhwould, you muſt aſſiſt me.

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

What diſtreſſes you?

Capt. BYGROVE.

My evil genius is at work. You know what my father has reſolved upon. Lady Bell is the perſon he chuſes for me.

DASHWOULD.

I know all that buſineſs: a counterplot of the widow's fertile brain, to diſappoint Lady Bell, and wreak her malice on Millamour.

Capt. BYGROVE.

But the malice falls on me only. Why will not Millamour know his own mind? Lady Bell loves him, I know ſhe does. I am thwarted in the tendereſt point; what muſt be done?

DASHWOULD.

Do as they would have you: you enſure ſucceſs. Millamour's jealouſy takes fire upon the firſt alarm, and while the paſſion holds, he will have vigour enough to act deciſively.

Capt. BYGROVE.

May I hazard the experiment?

DASHWOULD.

It's a ſure card. Take my advice.

Enter Miſs NEVILLE.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Mrs. Bromley's coach has juſt ſtopp'd at the dour: had not you better ſtep up ſtairs, gentlemen?

Enter

Enter Sir HARRY.

Sir HARRY.

Daſhwould, you are abſent too long. They are all as dull as a funeral, above ſtairs.

DASHWOULD. (aſide to Capt. BYGROVE)

How the Baronet follows Miſs Neville from room to room!—Come, Captain, I'll play a game of picquet with you before dinner.—Allons!

[Exit with Capt. BYGROVE.

Sir HARRY.

If I might have the liberty, ma'am, to——

Miſs NEVILLE.

Another time, if you pleaſe, Sir Harry. Mrs. Bromley is coming: I hear her voice.

Sir HARRY.

And you promiſe me the hearing?

Miſs NEVILLE.

You are intitled to it, Sir. I beg you'll leave me w.

Sir HARRY.

I obey your commands; I am gone; you'll remember. [Exit.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Here ſhe comes; and I think in good humour.

Enter

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Oh! I am heartily tired. I have been paying viſits to people who have never been let into my houſe, and who, I hope, will never be at home for me. I hate them all, but out of civility, we muſt keep up an acquaintance. Where are the girls? Has any body been here?

Miſs NEVILLE.

Mr. Millamour, ma'am, and the reſt of the gentlemen that dine here: they are all above ſtairs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Stupidity! did not I give orders——How long has Millamour been here?

Miſs NEVILLE.

About an hour.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

With Lady Bell, I ſuppoſe——Thou baſe ingratitude! and Sir Harry is here too, I reckon. Does your match go on? You ſhall go back to the country, I promiſe you. You'll be the ruin of thoſe girls. They ſhall have no viſitors, when my back is turned. I'll give orders to all the ſervants this very moment. (going)

Enter Sir JOHN MILLAMOUR.

Sir JOHN.

To ſee Mrs. Bromley looking ſo well——

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

You are very polite, Sir. Buſineſs calls me now, Sir John; I beg your pardon. [Exit.

Sir JOHN.

Has my ſon been here to-day?

Miſs NEVILLE.

He is above ſtairs with Lady Bell, Sir.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (within)

Miſs Neville, Neville, I ſay.

Miſs NEVILLE.

You'll excuſe me, Sir John; what can ſhe want? [Exit.

Sir JOHN.

This viſit portends ſome good, I hope. I ſhall be happy if he has declared himſelf. I'll ſtep and ſee what he is about. (going)

Enter MILLAMOUR.

MILLAMOUR.

Exquiſite! lovely angel!

Sir JOHN.

Well!—how!—what!

MILLAMOUR.

I beg your pardon, Sir; I am not at leiſure; I am am in the third region; and can't deſcend to the language of the nether world.

Sir JOHN.

Then you are in love, George.

MILLAMOUR.

She is a ſiſter of the Graces, and ſurpaſſes the other three. I am fixed; unalterably fixed; and am going about the marriage articles directly.

Sir JOHN.

They are at my lawyer's, ready engroſſed; and only wait for the lady's name, to fill up the blanks.

MILLAMOUR.

I know it, Sir: I muſt ſtep for them; I have it through my heart: I feel it here: I am your humble ſervant, Sir. (going)

Sir JOHN.

No, no; do you ſtay here; I'll ſtep for Mr. Copyhold. The writings ſhall be here in ten minutes.

[Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

The ſooner the better, Sir.

Let thoſe love now, who never lov'd before;
Let thoſe who always lov'd, now love the more.

(ſings) Loll, tol, lol.

Enter

Enter MALVIL.

MALVIL.

Bravo! you ſeem in prodigious ſpirits.

MILLAMOUR.

I am ſo: I am happy in myſelf, and happy in my friends, and happy in every circumſtance, and in tip-top ſpirits, and—my dear Malvil, your's down to the ground.

MALVIL.

Methinks, I ſympathize with you. When our friends are happy, the ſenſation is well called a fellow feeling.

MILLAMOUR.

Malvil, I thank you; your turn of mind is formed for laſting friendſhips. With Daſhwould it is all diſſipation, and giddy mirth, the mere bubble of pleaſure. To you, I may talk ſeriouſly. The topic of the day is enough for Daſhwould. I can now tell you, that I ſhall be happy for life. But for Daſhwould, I ſhould have been ſettled long ago. That fellow has led me into a thouſand errors.

MALVIL.

He has his admirers, and not without reaſon. He thinks me his enemy, but he is miſtaken. I never harbour reſentment.

MILLAMOUR.

You are growing grave, and I am a flight above common ſenſe at preſent.

MALVIL.

Daſhwould, notwithſtanding all his faults, does hit the mark ſometimes. I don't uſually laugh at his pleaſantry; I don't like to encourage him too much; but it muſt be owned, he is often right. Behind his back I cannot help being diverted by him. He has a quick inſight into characters.

MILLAMOUR.

No want of penetration there.

MALVIL.

No, no; he ſays, and perhaps rightly, your lively ladies often want common prudence; and giddy in the purſuit of pleaſure, they are frequently miſerable in the end.

MILLAMOUR.

But Lady Bell's good ſenſe, that refinement of underſtanding——

MALVIL.

There are falſe refinements; the ſhadow for the ſubſtance. Who is it that obſerves, we all diſcover early ſymptoms of the diſeaſe, by which our minds and bodies go to ruin?

MILLAMOUR.

Po! with Lady Bell there can be no riſk.

MAL-

MALVIL.

I don't know whether Daſhwould is good authority.—You know him beſt. He ſays——

MILLAMOUR.

Well!

MALVIL.

He is a ſhrewd obſerver.

MILLAMOUR.

Nobody more ſo.

MALVIL.

If he has a regard for any body, it is for you. You are the only man I never heard him ſpeak ill of. A match with Lady Bell is not to his mind. He talked ſeriouſly on the ſubject. Has not he told you?

MILLAMOUR.

Not a ſyllable

MALVIL.

I wonder at that. Lady Bell, he ſays, ſhew'd herſelf early. Impatient of advice, attentive to nothing but her beauty! whole days at her looking glaſs—I repeat his very words—he ſeemed to ſpeak out of downright regard for you.—At her toilette every feature had its inſtructions how to look; but no inſtruction for the mind. And then, ſays he, that terrible love of gaming!

MILLAMOUR.

Gaming!

MALVIL.

Don't you know it? I can't ſay I ever ſaw it myſelf. Time will determine her character.

MILLAMOUR.

If ſhe loves gaming, it is pretty well determined already.

MALVIL.

Perhaps not: I ſtill hope for the beſt.

MILLAMOUR.

Why yes; a man of ſenſe may form her mind, and then the gentler affections may take their turn.

MALVIL.

The very thing I ſaid.—But our pleaſant friend had an anſwer ready—Gentle affections, ſays he! don't you ſee that it is with people that once love play, as with perſons addicted to ſtrong cordials? they never return to cooler liquors.

MILLAMOUR.

There is ſome truth in that. I am for ever obliged to you. It is ingenuous, it is friendly of you to convey the hint.

MALVIL.

Don't build too much upon it. I have told you my author; and you know his way: he may deny it all.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

Shall I talk to him?

MALVIL.

I don't know what to ſay to that. In his vein of pleaſantry, he may give it another turn.

MILLAMOUR.

He may ſo. I am glad to know all this. But my Lady Jane, there's a model for her ſex to imitate.

MALVIL.

Have you watched her well? People ſhould appear what they really are. Let a precipice look like a precipice. When coverd over with flowers, it only ſerves to deceive the unwary. Mrs. Bromley has been very communicative about Lady Jane.

MILLAMOUR.

You alarm me. My dear friend explain.

MALVIL.

To do Lady Bell juſtice, ſhe is above diſguiſe. And tho' ſhe has her faults, I have ſeenher pleaſe by thoſe very faults.

MILLAMOUR. (ſmiling)

And ſo have I. Her very blemiſhes are beauty ſpots.

MALVIL.

No frankneſs about the youngeſt girl. It is friendſhip for you that makes me ſpeak. Her character is all forced, ſtudied, put on with her rouge.

MILLAMOUR.

Does ſhe paint?

MALVIL.

A little; the prudent touch. I am ſorry for her. When ſhe is ſettled in the world, many qualities, which now lie concealed, will break out into open day-light.

MILLAMOUR.

What a maſked battery there will be to play off upon a huſband!

MALVIL.

Their aunt told me all in confidence. You may judge how painfull it is to her. I have known the family for ſome time. I can't but be ſorry for the young ladies.

MILLAMOUR.

And ſince this is the caſe, I don't care how little I know of them, or their family.

MALVIL.

No occaſion to quarrel with the family. Great merit about Mrs. Bromley. She made an admirable wife, and that at an early period. She was but ſeventeen when ſhe married.

MILLAMOUR.

No more?

MAL-

MALVIL.

Not an hour: ſhe is not thirty: an eſtate in her own right, and the command of half a borough. No oppoſition there; the old houſes have the votes. A man may get a ſeat without trouble. Does not Sir John want to ſee you in parliament?

MILLAMOUR.

Yes. It would give him pleaſure.

MALVIL.

Well, you will judge for yourſelf. Were I as you, I ſhould know what courſe to take. Here ſhe comes! a good fine woman! a man may there ſit down to his happineſs at once.

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mr. Millamour, (curtſies) Mr. Malvil, what have you done with Mr Bygrove?

MALVIL.

I parted with him where you ſet us down. (ſpeaks to her aſide) I have talked to Millamour, and I think it will do.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Go you up ſtairs. (aſide to Malvil)

MALVIL.

How charmingly you look! like Lady Bell's eldeſt ſiſter!

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Po! you are laughing at me.

MALVIL.

Not I truly: I appeal to Millamour. I'll take the liberty to join the company above. (aſide to Millamour) She is the beſt of the family. [Exit.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

A valuable man Mr Malvil is! He has a great eſteem for you, Sir. His ſincerity is unequall'd. You ſeem thoughtful, Mr. Millamour.

MILLAMOUR.

Thoughtful, Ma'am!—There are certain ſubjects that—what Malvil ſays is true—A man may marry her, and ſit down to his happineſs at once. (aſide)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Sir John has been ſaying a great deal to me about you.

MILLAMOUR.

Has he, Ma'am?—There is a circumſtance, which he is as yet a ſtranger to—a circumſtance, which to communicate, will perhaps——It is what I have long wiſhed, and——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Faultering! heſitating! (aſide) I interrupt you.

MILLAMOUR.

There is a circumſtance, Ma'am—the affair is—

My

My father for a long time——Sir John, for a long time——Sir John has wiſhed——

Mrs. Bromley.

To ſee you married?

Millamour.

To ſee me married, Ma'am—and—he has—he has wiſhed it much.—And a ſettlement, by way of jointure—long ready for the Lady's name—that is—any lady, who ſhall honour me with her affection——and——

Mrs. Bromley.

No lady can be inſenſible of your pretenſions.

Millamour.

You are very good, Ma'am; and after long obſervation, and a laſting paſſion grafted on it, which, tho' ſilent hitherto,---yet working ſecretly---when diſcloſed at length---may to the perſon in the world ---who already formed by experience, may in every reſpect---and if without preſuming too far——

Mrs. Bromley.

What a delicate confuſion he is in. (aſide)

Millamour.

And if this paper, Ma'am——

Mrs. Bromley. (taking the paper)

When given by you, Sir——

Enter

Enter BYGROVE.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Perverſe and cruel! (walks aſide)

BYGROVE.

You both look grave; nothing amiſs, I hope.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Every thing is as it ſhould be, Sir.

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

Not if he knew all.

BYGROVE.

Sir John has been complaining——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Paſs that by; adviſe your own ſon; had not you better ſtep up ſtairs? Mr. Millamour will do what is right. (ſmiling at him) You may leave it all to him; truſt to his judgement.

Enter Sir HARRY.

Sir HARRY.

Millamour, I have ſuch a ſtory for you: Malvil and Daſhwould have been quarelling about you, and——

BYGROVE.

Po! and here they all come; I knew the ſubſtance could could not be far off, when the ſhadow projected before it.

Enter Lady BELL, DASHWOULD, and MALVIL.

Lady BELL.

Mr. Daſhwould, do you think I'll bear this? What liberty will you take next? You think, becauſe I laugh, that I am not offended. ——Aunt, I received a letter, and he has attempted to ſnatch it from me.

DASHWOULD.

Why it brings a little cargo of ridicule from the country, and my friend Malvil ſees no joke in it.

MALVIL.

When my friend's name is brought in queſtion, Sir——

Lady BELL.

It is diverting notwithſtanding.——Aunt, what do you think? My couſin Cynthia, you know, was to be married to Sir George Squanderſtock; her mother oppoſed it, and broke off the match, and now it's come out, that ſhe was all the time the clandeſtine rival of her own daughter.

MILLAMOUR.

Not inapplicable to the preſent buſineſs. (aſide)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Go, you giddy girl, no ſuch thing!

MIL-

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

She charms by her very faults.

Sir HARRY. (goes up to BYGROVE.)

And Daſhwould has been ſaying——

BYGROVE.

Po! repeat none of his ſayings to me.

Lady BELL.

Did you ſay any thing Mr. Daſhwould? What was it?

DASHWOULD.

Oh! nothing. Sir George Squanderſtock is my very good friend.

MALVIL.

And for that reaſon, you might ſpare him. No man is without his faults.

DASHWOULD.

Ay, allow him faults, out of tenderneſs.

BYGROVE.

Sir George is a valuable man, Sir, and repreſents his county to great advantage.

DASHWOULD.

He does ſo; takes a world of pains; nothing can eſcape him; Manilla ranſom not paid; there muſt be a motion about that matter: he knots his handkerchief kerchief to remember it.---Scarcity of corn! another knot---triennial parliaments---(knots.) Juries judges of law as well as fact (knots) national debt (knots) bail in criminal caſes (knots) and ſo on he goes, till his handkerchief is twiſted into queſtions of ſtate; the liberties and fortunes of all poſterity dangling like a bede roll; he puts it in his pocket, drives to the gaming table, and the next morning his handkerchief goes to the waſh, and his country and the minority are both left in the ſuds.

Lady BELL.

What a deſcription!

both laugh

Sir HARRY.

Hey! lively Lady Bell!

MILLAMOUR.

Ho! ho! I thank you, Daſhwould.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (aſide to MILLAMOUR.)

How can you encourage him? Let us leave 'em to themſelves.

MALVIL.

You ſee, Mr. Bygrove——

BYGROVE.

Ay! thus he gets a ſtory to graft his malice upon, and then he ſets the table in a roar at the next tavern.

Sir HARRY.

Never be out of humour with Daſhwould, Mr. Bygrove; he keeps me alive; he has been exhibiting pictures pictures of this ſort all the morning, as we rambled about the town.

DASHWOULD.

Oh! no; no pictures; I have ſhewn him real life.

Sir HARRY.

Very true, Daſhwould: and now mind him; he will touch them off to the life for you.

Mrs. BROLMEY.

Millamour ſo cloſe with Lady Bell! the forward importunity of that girl. (aſide, and goes to MILLAMOUR.)

DASHWOULD.

There is poſitively no ſuch thing as going about this town, without ſeeing enough to ſplit your ſides with laughing. We called upon my friend Sir Volatile Vainlove: he, you know, ſhines in all polite aſſemblies, and is, if you believe himſelf, of the firſt character for intrigue. We found him drinking Valerian tea for his breakfaſt, and putting on falſe calves.

Sir HARRY.

And the confuſion he was in, when we entered the room!

DASHWOULD.

In the next ſtreet, we found Jack Spinbrain, a celebrated poet, with a kept miſtreſs at his elbow, writing lampoons for the news-paper; one moment murdering the reputation of his neighbours, and the next next a ſuicide of his own.—We ſaw a young heir, not yet of age, granting annuity bonds, and five Jews, and three Chriſtians, duped by their avarice to lend money upon them. A lawyer——

Sir HARRY.

Hear, hear; it is all true. I was with him.

DASHWOULD.

A lawyer taking notes upon Shakeſpeare: a deaf Nabob raviſhed with muſick, and a blind one buying pictures. Men without talents, riſing to preferment, and real genius going to a jail.—An officer in a marching regiment with a black-eye, and a French hair-dreſſer wounded in the ſword arm.

Sir HARRY.

Oh! ho! ho! by this light I can vouch for every word.

BYGROVE.

Go on, Sir Harry, ape your friend in all his follies; be the nimble marmozet, to grin at his tricks, and try to play them over again yourſelf.

Sir HARRY.

Well now, that is too ſevere: Daſhwould, defend me from his wit. You know I hoard up all your good things.

DASHWOULD.

You never pay me in my own coin, Sir Harry: try now; who knows but you will ſay ſomething?

MAL-

MALVIL.

Friend or foe it is all alike.

Lady BELL. (coming forward)

And where is the mighty harm? I like pulling to pieces of all things.

MILLAMOUR. (following Lady BELL.)

To be ſure it is the life of converſation. Does your Ladyſhip know Sir George Squanderſtock's ſiſter?

Lady BELL.

I have ſeen her.

MILLAMOUR.

She is a politician in petticoats; a fierce republican; ſhe talks of the dagger of Brutus, while ſhe ſettles a pin in her tucker; and ſays more about ſhip-money, than pin-money.

BYGROVE.

And now you muſt turn buffoon?

DASHWOULD.

I know the lady; ſhe ſcolds at the loyaliſts, goſſips againſt the act of ſettlement, and has the fidgets for magna charta.

MILLAMOUR.

She encourages a wrinkle againſt bribery; flirts her fan at the miniſtry, and bites her lips at taxes, and a ſtanding army.

MAL-

MALVIL.

Mr. Bygrove, will you bear all this?

Enter Miſs NEVILLE, and whiſpers Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Very well, Neville, I'll come preſently.
[Exit Miſs NEVILLE.

MALVIL. (looking at Miſs NEVILLE.)

I ſhall ſtay no longer. Mr. Bygrove, will you walk? [Exit.

BYGROVE.

No, Sir, I ſhall not leave the enemy in this room behind me: a bad tranſlator of an antient poet, is not ſo ſure to deface his original, as his licentious ſtrain to diſparage every character.

DASHWOULD.

Sir Harry, he will neither give, nor take a joke.

Sir HARRY.

No, I told you ſo.

BYGROVE.

Let me tell you once for all, Sir——

DASHWOULD.

I wiſh you would.

BYGROVE.

Why interrupt? Do you know what I was going to ſay?

DASHWOULD.

No, do you?

MILLAMOUR.

I'll leave 'em all to themſelves. [Steals out.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (aſide)

Millamour gone! [Exit.

BYGROVE.

And what does all this mighty wit amount to? The wit in vogue, expoſes one man; makes another expoſe himſelf; gets into the ſecrets of an intimate acquaintance, and publiſhes a ſtory to the world; belies a friend; puts an anecdote, a letter, an epigram into the news-paper; and that is the whole amount of modern wit.

DASHWOULD.

A ſtrain of moroſe invective is more diverting, to be ſure.

BYGROVE. (looking about for Mrs. BROMLEY.)

Well, Sir, we'll adjourn the debate. You may go on; miſrepreſent every thing; if there is nothing ridiculous, invent a ſtory: and when you have done it, it is but a cheap and frivolous talent. Has a lady a good natural bloom? Her paint muſt be an expenſive penſive article. Does ſhe look grave? She will ſin the deeper. Is ſhe gay and affable? Her true character will come out at the Commons. That is the the whole of your art, and I leave you to the practice of it. (going)

DASHWOULD.

Satyrical Bygrove! now the widow has him in tow.

BYGROVE. (turning back)

Could not you ſtay till my back was fairly turned? [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

What a look there was!

Lady BELL.

At what a rate you run on! you keep the field againſt them all.

DASHWOULD.

Sir Harry, ſtep up, and watch him with the widow.

Sir HARRY.

I will; don't ſtay too long.

DASHWOULD.

I'll follow you: and hark, make your party good with Miſs Neville.

Sir HARRY.

You ſee, Lady Bell, a fling at every body. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

The Baronet does not want parts; that is to ſay, he has very good materials to play the fool with. I ſhall get him to marry Miſs Neville.

Lady BELL.

Bring that about, and you will for once do a ſerious action, for which every body will honour you.

DASHWOULD.

In the mean time, do you watch your aunt Bromley: ſhe is your rival.

Lady BELL.

Rival? That would be charming.

DASHWOULD.

It is even ſo. Now Millamour's underſtanding is good, but his paſſion's quick: if you play your cards right——

Lady BELL.

Are you going to teach me how to manage a man?

DASHWOULD.

Coquettry will never ſucceed with him. A quick-ſand does not ſhift ſo often as his temper. You muſt take him at his word, and never give him time to change, and veer about.

Lady BELL.

Totally out of nature.

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

Oh! very well. I give up the point. [Exit.

Lady BELL.

You may leave the man to my management. My aunt Bromley rival me! that would be delightful.

Enter Lady JANE.

Lady BELL.

Well, ſiſter!

Lady JANE.

Can you be ſerious for a moment?

Lady BELL.

Well, the ſolemnity of that look! Muſt I ſet my face by yours, and contract a wrinkle, by a formal œconomy of features, which you, like the reſt of the world, miſtake for wiſdom?

Lady JANE.

Will you hear me? They are hurrying this match too faſt, I think. Sir John is come, and his lawyer is expected every moment. He wants to conclude the affair this day, and my aunt does not oppoſe it. But I don't like all this hurry.

Lady BELL.

And why need you be concerned about it?

Lady JANE.

Do you think Millamour capable of love?

Lady BELL.

For the moment. It will be difficult to fix him.

Lady JANE.

What would you have me do?

Lady BELL.

Do?——Nothing.

Lady JANE.

How ſilly! you know it is not my ſeeking.

Lady BELL.

What are you about? Talking in your ſleep again? Lady Jane, wake yourſelf. What have you taken into your head?

Lady JANE.

Why ſince Mr. Millamour has prevailed with me——

Lady BELL.

His affections then are fixed upon you?——Why the man has been dying at my feet, with a face as rueful as a love elegy.

Lady JANE.

You will permit me to laugh in my turn.

Lady BELL.

Oh! I can laugh with you, and at you, and at him too. This gives ſpirit to the buſineſs: here are difficulties, ficulties, and difficulties enhance victory, and victory is triumph.

Lady JANE.

Very well! oh! brave! laugh away! you will be undeceived preſently.——If this does not take, I am at the end of my line. [Exit.

Lady BELL.

What does all this mean? Rivall'd, outwitted by my ſiſter! Inſupportable! This begins to grow ſerious.

Enter MILLAMOUR.

MILLAMOUR.

'Sdeath! ſhe here! Sir John is quite impatient, and I am going for his attorney.

Lady BELL.

And Lady Jane is impatient too: ſhe is the object of your choice.

MILLAMOUR.

Lady Jane! you are pleaſant, very pleaſant.

Lady BELL.

She has told me with inflexible gravity!

MILLAMOUR.

She is a great wit; and great wits have great quickneſs of invention; and ſo a ſtory is eaſily dreſſed up. I could crack my ſides with laughing. If trifling civilities have been received as a declaration of love——

Lady BELL.

And is that the caſe? Very whimſical indeed.

MILLAMOUR.

Yes, very whimſical! I am eternally yours, ma'am, and I am on the wing, and your Ladyſhip's adorer. (going)

Enter Lady JANE.

Lady JANE. (aſide)

Now to plague 'em both.—Siſter, you may hear it from himſelf.

MILLAMOUR.

Confuſion!

Lady BELL.

That lady, Sir, has the ſtrangeſt notion.——

Lady JANE.

You will be ſo good as to explain all to my ſiſter.

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

Both upon me at once.——I have explained, madam, and all further talk about it is unneceſſary.

Lady BELL.

Only to ſatisfy her curioſity.

Lady JANE.

To ſhew my ſiſter her miſtake.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR. (to Lady Jane)

I have made every thing clear, ma'am.—(to Lady Bell) Have not I, Lady Bell? And a—(turns to Lady Jane) every thing now is upon a proper footing.

Lady JANE.

Very well; only give her to underſtand——

MILLAMOUR.

Your underſtanding is admirable. (turns to Lady Bell) I told you ſhe would talk in this ſtyle. (turns to Lady Jane) You are perfectly right, and nobody underſtands things better. (turns to Lady Bell) Nobody whatever. (looks and laughs at both by turns)

Lady BELL.

But give me leave. You muſt ſpeak out, Sir.

MILLAMOUR. (aſide to Lady Bell)

Never argue about it, it is not worth your while.

Lady JANE.

There is ſome myſtery in all this.

MILLAMOUR.

No; all very clear; (to Lady Jane) drop it for the preſent.

Lady BELL.

But I deſire no doubt may remain,

Lady JANE.

And I don't like to be kept in ſuſpenſe.

(pulling him by the arm.)

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

Diſtraction! I am like a lawyer, that has taken fees on both ſides. You do me honour, ladies; but upon my ſoul, I can't help laughing. It will divert us ſome day or other, this will. Oh! ho! ho! I ſhall die with laughing. (breaks from them)

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY, and Sir JOHN.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

What is all this uproar for?

MILLAMOUR.

Another witneſs of my folly! (runs to the other ſide)

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

Millamour, I give you joy. Mr. Copyhold, your attorney, is come with the deeds. What's the matter?

MILLAMOUR.

The ſtrangeſt adventure! I can't ſtay now. The ladies have been very pleaſant. You love humour, and they have an infinite deal. I'll come to you in a moment. [Exit.

Sir JOHN.

George, don't run away: let us finiſh the buſineſs.

DASHWOULD.

If he ſays he'll marry, you may depend upon him him. A poet, determined to write no more, or a gameſter forſwearing play, is not ſo ſure to keep his word. I wiſh I may die, if I don't think him as much to be relied upon as a prime miniſter.

Lady BELL.

Aunt? Would you believe it? The demure Lady Jane—(burſts into a laugh) She has taken ſuch a fancy into her head! Millamour ſhe thinks is up to the eyes in love with her.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Ha! ha! ha! poor Lady Jane!

Lady JANE.

And my ſiſter's pride is hurt. She carries it with an air, as if ſhe had made a complete conqueſt.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

How ridiculous the girls are! your ſon has open'd his mind to you, Sir John?

Sir JOHN.

He has, and I approve of his choice. I hope it is as agreeable to you, as to his father.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I don't know how to refuſe my conſent.

Enter BYGROVE, liſtening.

BYGROVE.

What does all this mean?

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

As I could wiſh. There he is. (ſeeing BYGROVE)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Since it has your approbation, Sir John, I believe I muſt yield my conſent. I never thought to marry again, but ſince you will have it ſo——

Sir JOHN.

Lady Bell I underſtand, is willing to do me the honour of being my daughter in law.

Lady BELL.

Oh! ho! ho! ho! this makes amends for all. My dear Aunt Bromley, are you impoſed upon? Did you liſten to the traitor's vows?——The dear, perfidious? (laughs violently)

DASHWOULD.

He will ſoon be ſettled, Sir John, ſince there are now three rival goddeſſes contending for him. Mr. Bygrove, you are come in good time.

BYGROVE.

What fool's part are you to play now? (coming forwards)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Sir John, I deſire I may not be made your ſport. Have not I here, under his hand, a declaration of his mind; here, in this copy of verſes, given to me by himſelf, an earneſt of his affection?

Lady

Lady BELL.

Verſes! Aunt?

Lady JANE.

Verſes to you?

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Verſes to me: only hear, Sir John. (reads)

"I look'd, and I ſigh'd, and I wiſh'd I could ſpeak,"
"And fain would have paid adoration."

Lady BELL.

Stay, ſtay; mine begin the ſame way. (takes out a paper)

Lady JANE.

The very words of mine. (takes out a paper)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Will thoſe girls have done? (reads)

"But when I endeavour'd the matter to break,"

Lady BELL. (reads)

"Still then I ſaid leaſt of my paſſion."

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Will you be quiet? (reads)

"Still then I ſaid leaſt of my paſſion;"
"I ſwore to myſelf——

Lady

Lady BELL. (reads faſt)

" And reſolv'd I would try,

Mrs. BROMLEY, and Lady BELL. (reading together)

" Some way my poor heart to recover."

Lady JANE, Lady BELL, and Mrs. BROMLEY. (reading eagerly together.)

" But that was all vain, for I ſooner could die,
" Than live with forbearing to love her."

Lady BELL.

Oh! ho! ho! ho! Mr. Daſhwould, what a piece of work has he made?

DASHWOULD.

And the verſes copied from Congreve.

Lady BELL.

Copied from Congreve! (laughs heartily)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

There, Sir John, there is your ſon's behaviour!

DASHWOULD.

There, Mr. Bygrove, there is the widow's behaviour.

BYGROVE.

And now, Mr. Daſhwould, now for your wit.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (to Sir JOHN.)

I am not diſappointed in the leaſt, Sir.

Sir JOHN.

I never was ſo cover'd with confuſion!

Lady BELL.

I never was ſo diverted in all my days.

DASHWOULD.

He has acted with great propriety upon this occaſion.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

He has made himſelf very ridiculous. He has expoſed nobody but himſelf. Contempt is the only paſſion he can excite. A crazy, mad, abſurd—— (tearing the paper)

Lady JANE.

An inconſtant, wild, irreſolute—(tears the paper)

Lady BELL.

Ha! ha! ha! ſo whimſical a character. (kiſſes the paper)

Mrs. BROMLEY. (throwing the fragments about)

This behaviour will give him prodigious luſtre. He will ſhine after this. I hope his viſits will ceaſe at this houſe.

By-

(BYGROVE. going up to Mrs. BROMLEY.)

If ever you marry again, ſimilitude of temper muſt do it.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Diſtraction! muſt you plague me too?

BYGROVE.

You have appear'd with an air, but it was all ſtruggling.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

I cannot bear this.

BYGROVE.

Heaven knows how you have ſtruggled!

Mrs. BROMLEY.

And you too? (mimicks him) "A match in your family has diverted me of late." I renounce you all. Come, Lady Bell, Lady Jane, and let us leave them to themſelves. [Exit.

Lady JANE.

You would not believe me, ſiſter. [Exit.

Lady BELL.

Oh! this to me is as good as a comedy. [Exit.

DASHWOULD, (to BYGROVE.)

What ſhall I give you for your chance?

BY-

BYGROVE.

More than I'll give you for your wit. And there's your anſwer. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

The old pike is hooked, and ſtruggles ſtill at the end of her line.

Sir JOHN.

Mr. Daſhwould, ſpeak to this ſilly young man. You have influence over him. Keep him to dinner. You will for ever oblige me. I muſt go and pacify the ladies. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

Poor Millamour! Dryden has painted him to a hair.

Bleſt madman, who can ev'ry hour employ,
With ſomething new to wiſh, or to enjoy.

End of the THIRD ACT.

ACT the FOURTH.

Enter DASHWOULD, and Sir HARRY.

DASHWOULD.

THIS way, Sir Harry. While they are all engaged in the pleaſures of the table, I want a word with you in private.

Sir HARRY.

With that face of importance! what is coming now?

DASHWOULD.

Liſten to me: know a little of the ſubject, before you give your opinion.

Sir HARRY.

I am all attention.

DASHWOULD.

Did you mark Miſs Neville, at dinner?

Sir HARRY.

You know I did. And when Mrs. Bromley railed at her——

DASHWOULD.

She railed at her with a littleneſs of ſpirit, that diſgraced wealth and affluence, and gave to poverty the the ſuperior character. You muſt have ſeen in the behaviour of that girl, though treated with pride and arrogance, a propriety that was elegant, and went even further; it intereſted every heart for her. She is the beſt of the group. Were I, at the head of ſuch a fortune as yours, to chooſe a wife, ſhe ſhould be the object of my affection.

Sir HARRY.

You have ſome ſcheme in all this.

DASHWOULD.

I have; to ſerve you. I ſhould mortify the pride of Mrs. Bromley, by placing a valuable, but help-young lady upon a level with her at once.

Sir HARRY. (burſts into a laugh)

This is to end in ſome joke.

DASHWOULD.

Wait for the wit before you laugh. I am in ſerious earneſt. Her underſtanding is the beſt among them. The others are all artificial; ſhe is a natural character; and if I am not miſtaken, has a heart. If I wanted heirs to my eſtate, ſhe ſhould be the mother of my children.

Sir HARRY.

Were I to be the dupe of all this, how you would laugh at me? Ha! ha! ha! I know you too well.

DASHWOULD.

Again! laughing without the provocation of a joke Don't be the dupe of your own cunning. I know you love her; and will it not be a generoſity worthy of you, to extricate merit out of diſtreſs? Nay, the merit which you admire? The merit which would do honour to the choice of any man in England?

Sir HARRY.

Well, I cannot contain. (laughs heartily)

DASHWOULD.

What's the matter?

Sir HARRY.

The ſcrape in which you involved Millamour the widow!

DASHWOULD.

Fooliſh! that was Malvil's doing. You'll hear more of it by and by. There is an underplot in all his actions. I adviſe you for the beſt. Here is a lady in queſtion, untainted by the faſhions of the age. Make her your own. She has no fortune; what then? Shew yourſelf ſuperior to the ſordid views, that govern the little mercenary ſpirits of the world.

Sir HARRY. (laughs)

I have juſt recollected what you ſaid of Jack Invoice, upon his marriage.

DASHWOULD.

Jack Invoice? He never was intended for any thing but to be laughed at. Upon the death of a rich uncle in the city, he comes to the Weſt-end of the town, town, with a plumb in his pocket, and not an idea in his head; marries a fantaſtical woman of rank, and with a ſovereign contempt of all his former acquaintance, mixes with Lords and people of quality, who win his money, and throw his wig in the fire to divert themſelves. He laughs at their wit, and thinks himſelf in good company.

Sir HARRY.

Admirable! you have him to a hair. (laughing heartily)

DASHWOULD. (laughing)

Hey! the picture is like.—(laughs) Pretty well, not it?

Sir HARRY.

Oh! ho! ho! the very thing! poor Jack Invoice! you have hunted him down.

DASHWOULD.

Have I? (laughs) Yes, I think I have been pleaſant upon him. But come; to our point: in marrying Miſs Neville, there is nothing ridiculous. You like her, that's clear.

Sir HARRY.

But ſhe does not like me, and that's as clear. Some body has done me a prejudice there. She received this letter, and gave it me to read.

DASHWOULD. (reads)

"To Miſs Neville—(opens it) Without a name?

Sir HARRY.

A poiſon'd arrow in the dark.

DASHWOULD. (reads)

" Anonymous letters are generally the effect of " clandeſtine malice; this comes from a friend. If " your honour, your virtue, and your peace of mind, " are worth your care, avoid the acquaintance of " Sir Harry. He is the deceiver of innocence, and " means to add your name to the liſt of thoſe whom " his treachery has already ruined. Make uſe of " this hint, and act accordingly."
A pretty epiſtle—(pauſes) Don't I know this hand?—So, ſo! I underſtand it: I can trace this: ſay no more, Sir Harry: purſue Miſs Neville the cloſer for this. Will you let ſuch a fellow as Malvil rob you of a treaſure?

Sir HARRY.

You don't ſuſpect him?

DASHWOULD.

Leave it all to me. Aſſure Miſs Neville that this ſhall be cleared up. Huſh! we are interrupted; go and join the company.

Enter MALVIL.

Sir HARRY.

Pſhaw! pox! the company without you——

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

Very well; leave me now: (Exit Sir HARRY.) What's the matter Malvil?

MALVIL.

It will be over preſently: a ſudden ſenſation; I can't bear to ſee others made unhappy. Mrs. Bromley is a very valuable woman, but at times rather violent.

DASHWOULD.

And that's much to be lamented, is not it?

MALVIL.

You may laugh at it, Sir, but I think it a ſerious matter. I left poor Miſs Neville in a flood of tears; and——here ſhe comes.

Enter Miſs NEVILLE.

DASHWOULD.

Not riſing from table ſo ſoon?

Miſs NEVILLE.

Excuſe me, Sir, I had rather not ſtay.

DASHWOULD.

Never mind Mrs. Bromley's humours; come, we will all take your part.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I am not fit for company, Sir.

DASHWOULD.

I am ſorry to loſe you: I'll leave you with my worthy friend; he will adminſter conſolation.

[Exit.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Was there ever ſuch inhuman tyranny? Inſulted before the whole company!

MALVIL.

It hurts me to the quick. I could not have believed her capable of ſuch violence.

Miſs NEVILLE.

You ſaw that I gave her no provocation.

MALVIL.

It pains me to ſee what I do.

Miſs NEVILLE.

She breaks out in ſuch paſſionate onſets, and never conſiders that an overbearing pride is the worſt of cruelty to an ingenuous mind.

MALVIL.

There are few who know how to confer an obligation. A diſintereſted action gives ſuch moments of inward pleaſure! Oh! there are moments of the heart, worth all the giddy pleaſures of life. One benevolent action pays ſo amply, and yields ſuch exquiſite intereſt, that I wonder people are not fond of laying out their money in that way.

Miſs

Miſs NEVILLE.

During the whole time of dinner, it was one continued invective againſt me.

MALVIL.

Millamour's behaviour had diſconcerted her. But that is no excuſe. Goodneſs by fits, and generoſity out of mere whim, can never conſtitute a valuable character. I am ſorry to ſee you ſo afflicted.

Miſs NEVILLE.

You are very good, Sir.

MALVIL.

No, I have no merit in it; the inſtincts of my nature leave me no choice. I have ſtudied myſelf, and I find I am only good by inſtinct. I am ſtrangely intereſted for you. I have thought much of your ſituation: our time is ſhort; they will be all riſing from table, preſently. Attend to what I ſay: ſince Mrs. Bromley is ſo inceſſant in her tyranny, do as I already hinted to you. Withdraw from this houſe at once. Madam La Rouge has an apartment ready for you. You may there remain concealed. In the mean time I ſhall be at work for you. I ſhall prevail upon Mrs. Bromley to keep her word, about the five thouſand pounds. That added to what is in my power, will make a handſome ſettlement for you.

Miſs NEVILLE.

You heard what ſhe ſaid to Sir Harry.

MAL-

MALVIL.

She wants to drive you to ſome act of deſpair; perhaps to give you up a ſacrifice to Sir Harry's looſe deſires.

MISS NEVILLE.

Are you ſo clear about Sir Harry?

MALVIL. (aſide)

'Sdeath! I ſee ſhe loves him.——Hereafter, I will open a ſcene to aſtoniſh you. (pauſes, and looks at her) You can never be happy under this roof. Mrs. Bromley will make this quarrel up, I know ſhe will. The whole of her virtue conſiſts in repentance, but what kind of repentance? A ſpecious promiſe to reform her conduct, and a certain return of the ſame vices.

MISS NEVILLE.

She has made me deſperate. I can ſtay here no longer. I'll go back to the country. I ſhall there be at peace.

MALVIL.

You will be there too much out of the way. When you are ſettled at Madam La Rouge's, the haughty Mrs. Bromley will ſee to what ſhe has driven you, and for the ſake of her character, will begin to relent. Sir Harry muſt not know where you are. He means your ruin, I am ſorry to ſay it, but I can give you ſuch convincing proof——

Enter

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Do you go to your room, madam; let me ſee you no more to-day.

MALVIL.

It was a mere unguarded word that fell from Miſs Neville. (ſpeaks to Mrs. Bromley aſide) Millamour is aſhamed of his conduct. He is under my influence ſtill: I ſhall mould him to your wiſhes.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (aſide to him)

I am a fool to think any more about him. Go to him; watch him all day; you will not find me ungrateful. (loud) And pray tell thoſe girls to come up ſtairs. (Exit Malvil) Mighty well, madam. (to Miſs Neville) You muſt ſit next to Sir Harry: you have pretenſions, have you? And you muſt vouch for Lady Bell too? She does not love gaming; that ſtory is all calumny: beſpeak yourſelf a place in the ſtage coach; you ſhall quit this houſe, I promiſe you.

Miſs. NEVILLE.

It will be the laſt time I ſhall receive thoſe orders, madam. Your favours are ſo embittered; there is ſuch a leaven of pride, even in your acts of bounty, that I cannot wiſh to be under any further obligations. If doing juſtice to Lady Bell, if avowing my ſentiments in the cauſe of ſo amiable a friend, can give you umbrage, I am not fit to remain in this houſe. [Exit.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

O brave! you ſhall travel. Give her a for[illegible] No, let Lady Bell reward her. How!——Millamour, as I live.

Enter MILLAMOUR.

MILLAMOUR.

Deliver me, fate! ſhe here:——Madam—I—I—I—you are not going to leave us, I hope.

Enter Sir JOHN.

Mrs. BROMLEY. (ſmiling at Millamour)

And how can you look me in the face?

MILLAMOUR. (ſeeing Sir JOHN )

I am glad you are come, Sir, I wanted to——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Perverſe! what brings Sir John! (aſide)——I ſhall expect you above ſtairs, gentlemen. I muſt try once more to fix that irreſolute, inconſtant man. [Exit.

Sir JOHN.

What a day's work have you made here?

MILLAMOUR.

Sir!

Sir JOHN.

Can you expect any good from all this? For ever ever doing and undoing! Theſe proceedings are terrible to your father.

MILLAMOUR.

You know, Sir, that to gratify you is the height of my ambition.

Sir JOHN.

For ſhame! don't imagine that you can deceive me any longer. Are you to be for ever in ſuſpence? Always reſolving, and yet never decided? Never knowing your own mind for five minutes?

MILLAMOUR.

I have not been haſty to determine.

Sir JOHN.

My indulgence has made me too ridiculous. You will force me to tell you my mind in harſher terms than I ever thought I ſhould have occaſion to do.

MILLAMOUR.

What has happened to day, was but a mere frolic, and it has all paſſed off in a little raillery.

Sir JOHN.

And do you think that ſufficient? While you remain inſenſible of your folly; transferring your inclinations from one object to another; hurried away by every caſualty, you will prove the jeſt of all your acquaintance. You will ceaſe to live, before you have begun.

MILLAMOUR.

This is rather too much, Sir. If I have, in a few in-inſtances, departed from a reſolution that ſeeme fixed, you know very well, it is not uncommon; an when a perſon means an extraordinary leap, h tires back, to take advantage of the ground, ſpring forward with greater vigour.

Sir JOHN.

And thus you amuſe yourſelf, compounding upo eaſy terms, for the folly of every hour. There is n relying upon you.

MILLAMOUR.

After all, Sir, it is the prudent part to conſide every thing. The ladies were rather haſty in thei concluſion. In our moments of reflection, as object paſs before us, opinion will wear different colou s.

Sir JOHN.

The very Cameleon has that merit: but is there to be nothing inward? No ſelf-governing prin- ciple? A ſhip without a pilot, without rudder, o compaſs, is as likely to avoid rocks, and quickſands, as you to ſteer clear of ruin.

MILLAMOUR.

You ſeem exaſperated, but I really don't ſee the cauſe.

Sir JOHN.

No?—Can't you feel how abſurd it is to be alway beginning the world? For ever in a doubt? Day after day embarking in new projects, nay twenty dif- ferent projects in one day, and often in an hour?

MI

MILLAMOUR.

[illegible]re my confuſion: I feel my folly; I feel it all; [illegible]et my future conduct——

Sir JOHN.

George, can I take your word? I know you have [illegible]en at the gaming-table.

MILLAMOUR.

The gaming-table!

Sir JOHN.

Say no more: I know it all: after the indulgence I have ſhewn you, I now ſee that my hopes are all to be diſappointed. If you have a mind to attone for what is paſt, purſue one certain plan, and be ſomebody. The time now opens a new ſcene, and calls for other manners. Reform your conduct, and I ſhall be happy. But I am tired of this eternal levity: my patience is wore out. I ſhall ſtay no longer in this houſe to be a witneſs of your abſurdity. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

I have made myſelf very ridiculous here. I can't ſhew my face any more in this family. I'll go back to the Temple, and not marry theſe ten years. The law leads to great things: a ſeat in Parliament, a vote or two againſt your conſcience, a ſilk gown, and a judge; that's the courſe of things. I'll purſue my ambition.—Honeſt friend, (calls to a ſervant) hiſt! honeſt friend, will you be ſo good as juſt to get my hat?

Enter

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

No, I bar hats. What going to deſert us? The ſport is but juſt beginning. Bygrove has been lecturing his ſon, and quarrelling with Malvil. The integrity of that honeſt gentleman is ſuſpected at laſt. He was the worthieſt man in the world this morning, as good a creature as ever was born, but now he has ſold himſelf to the widow. Lady Bell has been lively upon the occaſion; and Malvil, to ſupport his ſpirits, has plyed the Burgundy, till he looks the very picture of hypocriſy, with a ruddy complexion, and a ſparkling eye.

MILLAMOUR.

You may divert yourſelf, Sir; I have done with them all.

DASHWOULD.

But I can't part with you: you ſhall join us; Malvil ſhall have no quarter: he will ſtick to his glaſs till his charity for his neighbour begins to ſtagger; then off drops the maſk: he will have courage enough to rail at mankind, and his true character will come forth, like letters in lemon juice before the fire.

MILLAMOUR.

Po! abſurd! I am on the rack. Why did you force me to ſtay dinner? I have been ſo weak, ſo frivolous.

DASH-

DASHWOULD.

How ſo? Becauſe you chang'd your mind? There is nothing more natural. Don't you ſee men doing the ſame thing every day? Down goes the old manſion; a new one riſes; exotic trees ſmile on the landſcape, and enjoy the northen air; and when the whole is finiſhed, in leſs than a twelve-month, the auctioneer mounts his pulpit. "Pleaſing contiguity" —"Beautiful, and picturesque ſcene"—"Delectably featured by Nature"—"Shall I ſay twenty thouſand?"—Down it goes to the higheſt bidder, who pays his money, and runs away the next morning with an opera ſinger to Italy.

MILLAMOUR. (laughing)

Why, yes, we ſee theſe things every day.

DASHWOULD.

No doubt; men are fickle, and inconſtant.

MILLAMOUR.

Very true; it is the way through life; in the loweſt rank, as well as the higheſt. You ſhan't ſee a journeyman Weaver, but he has his diſguſt, like a Lord, and changes his lodging, his houſe of call, his barber, and his field preacher.

DASHWOULD.

Certainly; and then there is a real charm in variety. Beſides what you did to day, was a mere frolic.

MILLAMOUR.

Nothing more: and that fellow, Malvil, was the occaſion of it. My heart never rightly warmed to that man. I ſhall never conſult him again. Affairs were in a right train, if he had not interpoſed.

DASHWOULD.

You ſhall have your revenge. I have a mine to ſpring will blow him up.—(laughs) His advice to-day has ſerved to produce the widow's character.

MILLAMOUR.

Yes, it has given a diſplay of her. (laughs) How could ſhe think me in earneſt? Marry her! I would go into the army ſooner.

DASHWOULD.

A good pretty trade, the army: if you are killed in battle, it is your affair; if you conquer, you may retire, and live very prettily upon half pay.

MILLAMOUR.

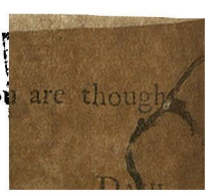
Very true: the law is a more certain road.

DASHWOULD.

A good agreeable life the law is: for ever entangled in the cobwebs of Weſtminſter-hall; and you help to ſpin them yourſelf into the bargin.

MILLAMOUR.

And at the end of twenty years, you are thought a good promiſing young man.



DASHWOULD.

In the mean time you are conſtantly hiring out your lungs, and ever in a paſſion about other people's affairs.

MILLAMOUR.

And travelling circuits, in hopes of finding each county diſtracted; with a barbarous, bloody murder, in every jail, and ſo live upon the calamities of mankind.

DASHWOULD.

Like phyſicians, when a north-eaſt wind, a Lord Mayor's feaſt, or a jail diſtemper, has made a good ſickly time of it. (both laugh)

Enter Lady BELL, and Lady JANE.

Lady BELL.

Come, ſiſter, leave the men to themſelves. Mr. Daſhwould, has their wit frightened you away?

MILLAMOUR. (looking at her)

" Look in her face, and you forget them all."

DASHWOULD.

Won't your Ladyſhip have compaſſion on that gentleman?

Lady BELL.

Compaſſion!——my ſiſter and I, we hope for his protection?

Enter Capt. BYGROVE.

Capt. BYGROVE.

When you go away from company, Lady Bell, you draw every body in your train.

Lady BELL.

Oh! you have ſo overpowered me with civil, and tender things!

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

What does he follow her for?

Lady BELL.

A l'honneur, gentlemen. (goes up to Millamour) Uncle! Uncle Millamour, when you are married to my aunt, I hope you will be kind to us both. (curtſies)

MILLAMOUR. (turning away)

Confuſion! daggers! daggers!

Lady JANE. (curtſying)

May I ſalute you, uncle?

MILLAMOUR.

Po! this foolery! (walks away)

Lady BELL.

Let us give him all his titles!—Brother—when you marry my Siſter.—(makes a low curtſy)

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

How can you, Lady Bell?

Lady JANE.

Uncle!—Brother! (both laugh)

Lady BELL.

And Brother Uncle!

MILLAMOUR. (breaking away from them)

This is too much—No patience can endure it. (turns to Lady Bell) Madam, this uſage——

(Lady BELL and Lady JANE both laugh loud.)

Lady JANE.

Come, ſiſter, let us leave him. [Exit.

Lady BELL.

Oh! ho! ho! I ſhall expire. (going)

MILLAMOUR.

Why will you torment me thus? (takes her by the hand) Am I to be for ever made your ſport?

Lady BELL.

Oh! you would not have me laugh. To be ſure, when one conſiders, it is a ſerious matter. And though Captain Bygrove (pointing to him) has orders to be in love with me; and though he has declared himſelf in the warmeſt terms——

MILLAMOUR.

And could you liſten to him?

Lady BELL.

And yet, after all your promiſes, when you had touched my heart—(in a ſoftened tone)

MIL AMOUR.

Jealous of me by this light. (aſide)

Lady BELL.

After all your faithleſs vows, to break them as you have done, like a Turk, or a Jew, or a Mahometan, (crying) and leave me, like Dido and Æneas, it is enough to break a young girl's heart. (crying bitterly) ſo it is, it is——There, will that pleaſe you? (burſts into a laugh) Adieu, uncle! my compliments to my aunt—— [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

Damnation!

Enter Sir HARRY.

Sir HARRY.

Did not I hear ſomebody crying?

MILLAMOUR.

Yes, and laughing too. Captain Bygrove, you ſaid ſomething to Lady Bell, what was it, Sir?

Capt. BYGROVE.

What I deſire the world to know; I love her, I adoi adore her. My father has orderd it, Mrs. Bromley approves; Lady Bell encourages me; and I ſhall be the happieſt of mankind.

MILLAMOUR.

You and I muſt talk apart, Sir. You know my prior claim. Attempt my life rather than my love. You muſt think no more of her, Sir; ſhe is mine by every tie, and ſo I ſhall tell her, this moment. [Exit.

DASAWOULD.

Now hold that reſolution, if you can.

Capt. BYGROVE.

I have managed it well.

DASHWOULD

Admirably!

SIR HARRY.

What does all this mean? Daſhwould, you are wanted in the next room. Malvil is in for it: he ſits toaſting Miſs Neville, while every idea fades away from his countenance, all going out one by one, and his eye ſinks into the dim vacuity of a briſk no meaning at all.

DASHWOULD.

I'll look in upon 'em.—Bygrove, I ſee Miſs Neville: let us give Sir Harry his opportunity.

Enter Miſs NEVILLE.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I thought Lady Bell was here: I beg your pardon, gentlemen.

DASHWOULD.

Your company is always agreeable, is not it, Sir Harry? The gentleman will ſpeak for himſelf. Come, Bygrove, I have occaſion for you.

[Exit with Captain Bygrove.

Sir HARRY.

May I now preſume, madam——

Miſs NEVILLE.

You chuſe your time but ill, Sir Harry. I have ſo many things to diſtract me, I cannot liſten to you now.

Sir HARRY. (takes her hand)

But you promiſed to hear me; I have long beheld your ſufferings.

Miſs NEVILLE.

They do not warrant improper liberties. I can be humble as becomes my ſituation. I hope you will not oblige me to ſhew that ſpirit, which virtue is as much intitled to, as the proudeſt fortune in the kingdom.

Sir HARRY.

I mean you no diſreſpect. That letter is a black artifice artifice to traduce my character: the fraud ſhall be brought to light; you may rely upon it; nor will you be ſo ungenerous as to believe the dark aſſaſſin of my honour.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I know not what foundation there is for it, nor is it for me to charge you with any thing. I have no right to take that liberty.

Sir HARRY.

Why harbour ſuſpicions unworthy of you? In me, you behold a warm admirer, who aſpires at the poſſeſſion of what he loves, and trembles for the event.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I muſt take the liberty to doubt your ſincerity. I know my own deficiencies, and I beg leave to withdraw.

Sir HARRY.

By all that's amiable in your mind and perſon, my views are honourable as ever yet inſpired a lover's heart.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I would fain expreſs my gratitude. (weeps)

Sir HARRY.

Why thoſe tears?

Miſs NEVILLE.

Your character, I dare ſay, Sir, will come out clear clear and unſullied. You will permit me to take care of mine. It is all I have to value. I ſhall not continue any longer in this houſe. Mrs. Bromley has made it impoſſible; I wiſh you all happineſs, Sir.

Sir HARRY.

That reſolution I approve of: let me provide you a retreat, and in a few days—

Miſs NEVILLE.

I muſt beg to be excuſed: that I can never think of.

Sir HARRY.

By Heaven, I mean to raiſe you to that independance, which your merit deſerves. I would place you in that ſplendor, which Mrs. Bromley may envy.

Miſs NEVILLE.

I can only return my thanks. Lady Bell will know where I am. I feel no ambition: I do not want to give pain to Mrs. Bromley: I ſeek humble content, and aſk no more.

Sir HARRY.

You do injuſtice to yourſelf and to me:—Hey! all breaking up from table!

Miſs NEVILLE.

You muſt not detain me now, Sir Harry. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.

Sir HARRY.

I wonder what Daſhwould will ſay to all this. I ſhall ſhall like to hear him: he will turn it to a joke, I warrant him. No end of his pleaſantry.

Enter MALVIL in liquor, BYGROVE, and DASHWOULD.

MALVIL.

Very well; make the moſt of it. Since you force me to ſpeak, I ſay her character is a vile one.

BYGROVE.

Here is a fellow whom wine only inſpires with malice.

DASHWOULD.

Po! malice! Malvil has no harm in him.

MALVIL.

You may talk of Mrs. Bromley, but ſhe is as vile a character, as pride, and inſolence, and avarice, and vanity, and faſhionable airs, and decayed beauty can jumble together.

BYGROVE.

Here's a return for her hoſpitality!

MALVIL.

Marry her, I ſay; marry her, and try.

BYGROVE.

You ſhall not have a ſhilling with Miſs Neville.

MALVIL.

There, the ſecret's out: you want to marry her, and make her break her word. Mankind's a villain! a medley a medley of falſe friends, eloping wives, ſtock jobbers, and uſurers. Wits that won't write, and fools that will. (ſings.)

BYGROVE.

Daſhwould, you are a panegyriſt, compared to this man.

Sir HARRY.

Yes, he takes your trade out of your hands.

MALVIL.

She is Mrs. Bromley, the widow, and you are Mr. Bygrove, the widower; and ſo, bite the biter, that's all.

BYGROVE.

His wit ſoars above you, Mr. Daſhwould.

MALVIL.

Wit is a bad trade. Letters have no friend left in theſe degenerate times. Shew a man of letters to the firſt of your nobility, and they will leave him to ſtarve in a garret. Introduce a fellow, who can ſing a catch, write a dull political pamphlet, or remarks upon a Dutch memorial, or play off fireworks, and he ſhall paſs ſix months in the country, by invitation. Mæcenas died two thouſand years ago, and you are not hiſtorian enough to know it.

Sir HARRY.

Daſhwould, he makes a bankrupt of you.

BYGROVE.

I have found him out: I know him now: a pretended friend, that he may more ſurely betray you. Go, and get ſome coffee, to ſettle your head.

[Exit.

MALVIL.

Mrs. Bromley will ſettle your head.

DASHWOULD.

Let us take him up ſtairs; he'll tumble over the tea-table, to ſhew his politeneſs.

Sir HARRY. (taking him by the arm)

Come, the ladies wait for us.

MALVIL.

Mankind, I ſay, is a villain! (ſings)

Enter Lady BELL.

Lady BELL.

Bleſs me, Mr. Malvil!

MALVIL.

All Daſhwould's doing to expoſe a body. Do you look to Millamour, that's what I ſay to you.

DASHWOULD.

He ſhan't ſtay to plague your Ladyſhip.—Come, Malvil, let us go and be tender of reputation above ſtairs.

MAL-

MALVIL.

I'm always tender, and you are ſcurrilous.
(Sings, and Exit, led by Daſhwould and Sir Harry)

Lady BELL.

How Millamour follows me up and down! Charming! here he comes.

Enter MILLAMOUR.

MILLAMOUR.

Lady Bell, allow me but one ſerious moment.

Lady BELL.

This bracelet is always coming off.
(fiddles with it)

MILLAMOUR.

Whatever appearances may have been, I burn with as true a paſſion, as ever penetrated a faithful heart.

Lady BELL. (aſide, and ſmiling)

I know he is mine.—This ſilly, obſtinate bauble! What were you ſaying? Oh! making love again.

MILLAMOUR.

By this dear hand I ſwear——

Lady BELL.

Hold, hold, no violence. Give me my liberty, and thus I make uſe of it. (runs away from him)

Enter

Enter Capt. BYGROVE.

Lady BELL. (meeting him)

Oh! I have been wiſhing for you. How could you ſtay ſo long?

Capt. BYGROVE.

They detained me againſt my will. But you ſee, I am true to my appointment.

MILLAMOUR. (aſide to Bygrove)

Are you ſo? You ſhall keep an appointment with me.

Lady BELL.

I was ſurrounded with darts, and flames. That gentleman was for renewing the old ſtory, but it is ſo ridiculous!

(walks up the ſtage with Captain Bygrove)

MILLAMOUR.

Diſtraction! to be inſulted thus!

Lady BELL. (as ſhe walks up)

You have prevailed upon me to be in earneſt at laſt. Since your father has propoſed it, and ſince you have declared yourſelf, why, if I muſt ſpeak, get my aunt's conſent, and mine follows of courſe.

MILLAMOUR. (liſtening).

If ever I forgive this.

Capt.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Mrs. Bromley has conſented. (then aſide to Lady Bell) He has it; this will gall his pride.

MILLAMOUR.

No end of her folly. I was bent on marriage, but now it's all her own fault. And yet ſhe knows my heart is fixed upon her.

Lady BELL.

(walking down with Capt. Bygrove)

You are ſo obliging, and I have ſo many things to ſay to you; but if people will not perceive, when they interrupt private converſation.

MILLAMOUR.

If ever I enter theſe doors again, may the ſcorn of the whole ſex purſue me. [Exit.

Capt. BYGROVE.

We have carried this too far.

Lady BELL.

The barbarous man, when he ſhould have taken no denial, but have lain on the ground, imploring, beſeeching—Delightful! here he comes again.

(goes to Capt. Bygrove)

Enter MILLAMOUR.

MILLAMOUR. (walking up to Lady Bell)

Is it not ſtrange, that you can't know your own mind for two minutes together?

Lady

Lady BELL.

Ho! ho! the assurance of that reproach!

(walks away)

MILLAMOUR. (to Bygrove)

Appoint your time and place: I must have satisfaction for this.

Capt. BYGROVE.

To-morrow morning, when the marriage ceremony is over.

MILLAMOUR.

I shall expect you, Sir. (going)

Enter Lady JANE.

MILLAMOUR.

This is lucky. I was in quest of your Ladyship.

Lady JANE.

In quest of me, Sir?

MILLAMOUR.

In quest of you, Ma'am. I have been waiting for an opportunity, and, if the sincerest sorrow can expiate past offences—Here's a chair, Ma'am.

(hands a chair)

Capt. BYGROVE. (to Lady Bell)

We may drive him to extremities with Lady Jane: I'll leave you to recover your wanderer. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR. (ſitting down)

If you will permit me to aſſure you—

Lady JANE.

But while my ſiſter is my rival——

MILLAMOUR.

Your ſiſter's charms carry their own antidote with them. If there is faith in man, I mean to atone for what is paſt.

Lady BELL. (coming forward)

So, ſo; with what pleaſure ſhe hears him? Did you ſpeak to me, Mr. Millamour?

MILLAMOUR.

There was a time, Ma'am!—(turns to Lady Jane) Now ſhe wants to interrupt us: don't let us mind her, and ſhe'll withdraw.

Lady BELL.

Wear the willow, Lady Bell?—Not a word, Sir? You are in the right: my ſpirits are too violent for you; and though what I ſay is not abſolutely wit—Do you like wit? I am ſure you ought; for it is undefineable, like yourſelf.

MILLAMOUR. (ſmiling)

That is not ill ſaid.

Lady BELL. (ſits at a diſtance)

Horrid! I ſhall be vapour'd up to my eyes. I'll try try my ſong, to baniſh melancholy. Where is that fooliſh guittar? (goes for it)

MILLAMOUR.

Now her jealouſy is at work. I knew ſhe would be mortified. Let us agree to pique her pride, and probe her to the quick.

Lady BELL.

Though I can't ſing, it diverts a body to try. (ſits down, and ſings)

Sabrina, with that ſober mien,
The converſe ſweet, the look ſerene;
Thoſe eyes that beam the gentleſt ray,
And though ſhe loves, that ſweet delay
Unconſcious, ſeems each heart to take,
And conquers for her ſubject's ſake!

MILLAMOUR.

Vaſtly well! (liſtens, ſmiles, looks at her, draws his chair near her, and beats time on her knee)

Lady BELL. (ſings)

The tyrant Cynthia wings the dart,
Coquetting with a bleeding heart;
Has cruelty, which all adore,
Flights that torment, yet pleaſe the more;
Her lover ſtrives to break his chain,
But can't, ſuch pleaſure's in the pain.

MILLAMOUR.

Oh! charming! charming! (kiſſes her hand)

Lady BELL.

What are you about, you wretch? Only look, ſiſter: I ſuppoſe, Sir, when you have done, you will give me my hand again.

Lady JANE.

I promiſe you, ſiſter, your triumph will be ſhort. [Exit.

Lady BELL.

How ſhe flung out of the room! (riſes, and walks about)

MILLAMOUR.

You know, Lady Bell, that I am your's by conqueſt. I adore you ſtill, and burn with a lover's faithful fires.

Lady BELL.

Come, and have a diſh of tea to cool you.

MILLAMOUR.

Hear me but a moment. It is now time you ſhould be tired of this eternal diſplay of your power. Your power is ſufficiently acknowledged and felt by all. You may triumph over adoring crouds, but one lover treated with generoſity, will be more to your honour and your happineſs,

Lady BELL.

Pretty, very pretty! I have read all that in one of the poets. (repeats).

By

By our diſtreſs, you nothing gain,
Unleſs you love, you pleaſe in vain.

Come up ſtairs, and I'll ſhew you the whole poem.

And one adorer kindly us'd,
Gives more delight than crowds refus'd.

Will you come? (beckons him) Won't you? Well, conſider of it, and when you know your own mind, you may change it again. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

There now! Every thing by turns, and nothing long. Fickle do they call me? A man muſt be fickle, who purſues her through all the whimſies of her temper. Admire her in one ſhape, and ſhe takes another in a moment.

One charm diſplay'd, another ſtrikes our view,
In quick variety for ever new.

End of the FOURTH ACT.

ACT the FIFTH.

Enter MILLAMOUR, and DASHWOULD.

MILLAMOUR.

AM I to be ſacrificed to your humour?

DASHWOULD.

Am I to be ſacrificed to your abſurdity?

MILLAMOUR.

When pleaſantry is out of all time and place——

DASHWOULD.

Why then I ſhall be tired of all time and place.

MILLAMOUR.

Look ye, Mr. Daſhwould, it is time to be ſerious. The wit, that wounds the breaſt of a friend, is the peſt of ſociety.

DASHWOULD.

The paſſion, Mr. Millamour, that runs headlong without cauſe, and will not hearken to reaſon, is a greater peſt of ſociety, than all the little wit that has been in the world. What does all this mean, Sir? what is it about?

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

If I loſt money at play, was it for you to carry the tale to my father? for you to ſubject me to his reproaches?

DASHWOULD.

I don't know by what fatality it happens, but that generally comes laſt, which ought to be mentioned firſt. I repeated nothing to Sir John—Who did? Do you aſk that queſtion? Malvil, Sir, with his uſual duplicity.

MILLAMOUR.

Malvil? He has this moment told me how pleaſant you were upon the ſubject, and at my expence.

DASHWOULD.

Yes; when he had revealed the whole, and with falſe tenderneſs lamented your folly.

MILLAMOUR.

'Sdeath! I underſtand it now. I have been abſurd here.

DASHWOULD.

I don't diſlike you for your abſurdity: that ſerves to divert one: Malvil excites other feelings. You know the character he gave you of Lady Bell?

MILLAMOUR.

Yes, and all ſlander.

DASHWOULD.

I left him but now, repreſenting you to Lady Bell in the ſame colours——And here——(ſhews a letter) Here I have him faſt. An anonymous letter againſt Sir Harry, ſent for his own purpoſes, to Miſs Neville. All his contrivance, dictated by himſelf, and written at an attorney's deſk: You know old Copyhold?

MILLAMOUR.

Did he pen the letter?

DASHWOULD.

One of his clerks was the ſcribe. The young man is now in the houſe, at my requeſt, and ready to prove Malvil the author. Here he comes—things are not ripe as yet. Say nothing now.

Enter MALVIL.

MILLAMOUR.

Walk in; you come opportunely.

MALVIL.

If I can be of any ſervice——

MILLAMOUR.

To be of diſſervice, is your province; and when you have done the miſchief, you can transfer the blame to others.

MAL-

MALVIL.

I have been rather off my guard to day. I am not uſed to be overtaken in that manner; my head is not quite clear.

MILLAMOUR.

Then this buſineſs may ſober you. What was your whiſper to me about that gentleman?

MALVIL.

That he treated with wanton pleaſantry what I thought a ſerious matter. I may miſtake the means, but the end of my actions I can always anſwer for. Sir John might hear of the affair from another quarter, and ſo to ſoften his reſentment——

MILLAMOUR.

You took care to excite it.

MALVIL.

I—I—I am apt to carry my heart at my tongue's end.

DASHWOULD.

I knew his heart was not in the right place.

MALVIL.

I did not addreſs myſelf to you, Sir.

MILLAMOUR.

I know you have the grimace of character, Mr. Malvil, arm'd at all points with plauſible maxims. But

But which of your maxims can juſtify the treachery of betraying the ſecret of a friend? Who does it, is a deſtroyer of all confidence; and when he attempts to varniſh his conduct, with the ſpecious name of friendſhip, the malignity ſtrikes the deeper: artful, ſmiling malignity.

MALVIL.

I deſerve all this. Friendſhip in exceſs is a fault. There are bounds and limits even to virtue. It would be well if a man could always hit the exact point. There is however ſomething voluptuous in meaning well.

DASHWOULD.

Well expreſs'd, Malvil! ha! ha! you are right.

MILLAMOUR.

No more of your muſty ſentences.

MALVIL.

Morals are not capable of mathematical demonſtration. And——now I recollect myſelf—It did not occur at firſt—It was Madam La Rouge told the affair to Sir John—This gentleman here—I ſuppoſe you will take his word—he ſays ſhe hears every thing, tells every thing, and he calls her a walking newspaper: not that ſhe means any harm—I only mean to ſay——

DASHWOULD.

Oh! fie, don't be too ſevere upon her.

MAL-

MALVIL.

She ſaid at the ſame time——you know her manner——ſhe told Sir John that you are in love with half a dozen, and will deceive them all, and Lady Bell into the bargain.

MILLAMOUR.

Diſtraction! ſhe dare not ſay it. This is another of your ſubterfuges——You know, Sir, how you traduced Lady Bell, and made that gentleman the author of your own malevolence. At any other time and place, this ſword ſhould read you a lecture of morality.

MALVIL.

You are too warm: and ſince I ſee it is ſo, to avoid contention, I ſhall adjourn the debate. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

Deceive Lady Bell!—Whoever has dared to ſay it,—Madam La Rouge lives but a little way off. I'll bring her this moment, to confront this arch impoſtor. (going)

DASHWOULD.

You'll be ſure to return.

MILLAMOUR.

This very night ſhall unmaſk him. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

I ſhall depend upon you. Malvil ſhall anſwer to Sir Harry: all his artifices ſhall be fairly laid open.

Enter

Enter BYGROVE.

BYGROVE.

Mr. Daſhwould, we are now good friends. I have repoſed a confidence in you. You know every thing between me and Mrs. Bromley, but you ſee how ſhe goes on.

DASHWOULD.

And I ſee how you go on. You are the dupe of your own policy.

BYGROVE.

How ſo?

DASHWOULD.

The Widow's ſchemes are ſeconded by your own imprudence. Can't you ſee, that if Millamour were once married out of your way, Mrs. Bromley would then be at her laſt ſtake, and you might have ſome chance? And yet your ſon has it in command to defeat my friend Millamour with Lady Bell.

BYGROVE.

How! light breaks in upon me. Gull that I was! my ſon ſhall marry Lady Jane directly.

DASHWOULD.

To be ſure; and the conſequence is, that Lady Bell declares for Millamour.

BYGROVE.

Right: I am for ever obliged to you: I'll go, and ſpeak ſpeak to my ſon, this moment: Lady Jane ſhall be his, without delay. [Exit.

DASHWOULD.

So much for my friend, the Captain: I have ſettled his buſineſs.

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Mr. Daſhwould, I am ſo diſtracted——a terrible buſineſs has happened.

DASHWOULD.

What's the matter?

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Miſs Neville, I can't think what is come of her—ſhe is not to be found, high or low. We have ſearched every where for her. What can be the meaning of this?

DASHWOULD.

Is Malvil gone?

Mrs. BROMLEY.

This very moment: he has no hand in it. He ſees, and pities my diſtreſs. He is gone to make enquiry. A girl that I was ſo fond of, and never ſaid an angry word to.

DASHWOULD.

You have been remarkably mild.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

You know how tender I have been of her.—What can have put this into her head? How long has Millamour been gone?——I underſtand it now. This is his exploit.

DASHWOULD.

You wrong him—I will undertake to diſcover this plot for you.

Enter BYGROVE.

DASHWOULD.

You can comfort the Lady, Sir; I ſhall return immediately. [Exit.

BYGROVE.

May I take the liberty, Madam——

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Why torment me thus? You are all in a plot againſt me.

Enter Lady BELL, Lady JANE, and Capt. BYGROVE.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

There, Lady Bell, there is your lover run away with your couſin.

Lady BELL.

I can depend upon her. I can ſtill venture to anſwer for her honour.

BYGROVE.

She will come back, you need not alarm yourſelf.

Mrs.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

You have ſeduced her, for any thing I know. I am diſtracted by you all, and will hear no more.

[Exit.

BYGROVE.

Mrs. Bromley, permit me to ſay a word.

[Exit.

Lady BELL.

I hope there is nothing amiſs. I can rely upon Miſs Neville's diſcretion; I think I can. Come, ſiſter, let us go and enquire. (going, looks back) Hey! you two are ſtaying, to ſay delicate things to each other.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Our difficulties, you know, are at an end. I have my father's orders to follow my inclination. Had Millamour ſtaid, I have a plot would have fixed him your Ladyſhip's for ever.

Lady JANE.

And we ſha'n't ſee him again this month, perhaps.

Lady BELL.

Let him take his own way. I am only uneaſy about Miſs Neville at preſent.

Enter DASHWOULD. (with a letter in his hand)

DASHWOULD.

This way, you are wanted: I have a letter here, that diſcovers all. [Exit.

Lady

Lady BELL.

But what does it ſay? Let us go and hear it directly. [Exeunt.

Scene, an Apartment at Madam LA ROUGE's.

Enter MILLAMOUR, and LA ROUGE.

MILLAMOUR.

Have you ſent to Daſhwould?

LA ROUGE.

Yes, I have ſent him letter.

MILLAMOUR.

Miſs Neville here you ſay?

LA ROUGE.

She come an hour ago, all in tear.

MILLAMOUR.

Then ſhe is ſafe.——You are ſure you never ſaid any thing to Sir John about the gaming buſineſs?

LA ROUGE.

Sur, mon honneur. What I tell? I know noting. And I not ſee Sir John in my houſe, it is two tree months.

MILLAMOUR.

You ſhall come, and confront Malvil, at Mrs. Bromley's.

LA

La Rouge.

Bagatelle! what you go dere for?—Bo, dis is all put me off—pay your littel bill. Vat is money to you? I ſo poor, you ſo rich.

Millamour.

You did not ſay that I ſhould deceive Lady Bell?

La Rouge.

Monſieur Malvil, he tell you ſo?

Millamour.

Yes; and I tremble for the conſequence.

La Rouge.

It is one great villain—I great reſpect for you. Vous eſt aimable. Monſieur Malvil, he is great fripon. And I ver ſorry he be marry to Madamoiſelle Neville.

Millamour.

Married to her?

La Rouge.

You not know it?—He is marry to her dis day. He take my apartment tree week ago. He not have it known dat he is marry for five ſix day; write letter to me dis afternoon; he muſt be let in ver private; de ſervant not to ſee him; go up de back ſtairs to her room, and ſo l' affaire eſt faite.

MILLAMOUR.

And thus he has ſeduced her from her relations? Let me ſee the letter. (reads aſide)

LA ROUGE.

I not tink him ſo bad to talk of me, and tell ſuch parcel of ſtory, vid not one word of true.

MILLAMOUR.

So; here he is in black and white. To come privately, is he? If I could detain him here, and prevent all means of his eſcaping——

LA ROUGE.

Eſcape? Up back ſtairs, he muſt come thro' dat apartment; (pointing to a door in the back ſcene) I turn de key in de back door: voila votre priſonier; he is priſoner.

MILLAMOUR.

Exquiſite woman! I'll lock this door, and ſecure the key. (locks the door in the back ſcene) Huſh! (A rap at the ſtreet door)

LA ROUGE.

Le voila: he come now.

MILLAMOUR.

Fly, let him in; ſend once more to Daſhwould; I want him this inſtant; fly, diſpatch.

LA ROUGE.

I do all vat you bid me. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

It is honeſt of her to make this diſcovery. If this be Malvil—a ſoft whiſper that—(liſtens) 'Tis he, I hear his voice——I ſhall have the merit of defeating villainy, and protecting innocence——Don't I hear Miſs Neville? (goes to a room-door) Miſs Neville!

NEVILLE. (entering)

Madam La Rouge!---Oh, Sir! what brings you hither?

MILLAMOUR.

It is your intereſt to hear me; your happineſs depends upon it.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Alas! I fear I have been too raſh.

MILLAMOUR.

Command your attention, and liſten to me: Malvil has planned your ruin.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Impoſſible: he has too much honour: why will you alarm me thus? I am unfortunate, and you, Sir, need not add to my afflictions.

MILLAMOUR.

You have truſted yourſelf to a villain: he means, at midnight, to gain acceſs to your perſon; to triumph over your honour, and then leave you to remorſe, to ſhame, and miſery. Read that letter. (gives it her, and ſhe reads it to herſelf) She's an amiable girl, and I dare ſay, will make an admirable wife—— Hark! I hear him in yonder room. Suppreſs each wild emotion of ſurprize, and wait the event.

MISS NEVILLE.

I can ſcarce believe what I read. What have I done? (weeps) You have led me into a maze of doubts and fears, and there I wander, diſtracted, loſt; without a clue to guide me.

MILLAMOUR.

I will direct you: rely upon me.

Enter DASHWOULD, Lady BELL, and Lady JANE.

DASHWOULD.

La Rouge has told us the whole ſtory.

MILLAMOUR.

Huſh! no noiſe.

Lady BELL.

My ſweet girl, how could you frighten me ſo?

Miſs NEVILLE.

I bluſh for what I have done. But Mrs. Bromley's cruelty drove me to deſpair.

Lady JANE.

My dear, all will be well: don't flurry yourſelf.

Lady BELL.

Tho' my aunt vexed you, why run away from me?

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY, BYGROVE, Sir HARRY, and Capt. BYGROVE.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Where is this unhappy girl?

MILLAMOUR.

A moment's patience.

Enter LA ROUGE.

MILLAMOUR.

Is he ſafe?

LA ROUGE.

He is dere in the room as ſafe as in Baſtile.

MILLAMOUR.

Speak to him thro' the door: now all be ſilent.

LA ROUGE.

Monſieur Malvil, open de door.

MALVIL. (within)

Do you open it, you have the key.

LA ROUGE.

De key, it is dere: Miſs Neville, it is gone to bed; all de houſe aſleep: I in de dark; now is your time.

MILLAMOUR. (to La Rouge)

Huſh! here is the key. (takes away the light.)

MALVIL.

Will you diſpatch?

LA ROUGE.

Attendez: here is de key: I let you out. (unlocks the door)

MALVIL. (entering)

All in darkneſs: Is ſhe gone to bed?

LA ROUGE. (leading him)

She wait for you: vere was you marry?

MALVIL.

St. James's pariſh: Sir Harry has not ſucceeded; ſhe prefers me. Say nothing of it yet awhile.

LA ROUGE.

No; not a vord: tenez, I get light for you.

[Exit.

MAL-

MALVIL.

So; I have carried my point. The family will be glad to patch up the affair, to avoid the diſgrace.

LA ROUGE. (Entering)

Ah! you look en cavalier; ver good apartment for you; and dere is good picture. It is Tarquin and Lucrece; Tarquin go to raviſh de lady in de night. It was villain, was it not?

MALVIL.

A terrible fellow!

LA ROUGE.

And dis room it is velle furniſh: look about you; more picture, and all original. (turns him to the company)

OMNES.

Ha! ha! ha! your ſervant Mr. Malvil!

MALVIL.

Hell and confuſion!

MILLAMOUR. (taking him by the arm)

There are bounds and limits even to virtue.

DASHWOULD. (at his other arm)

Morals are capable of mathematical demonſtration.

LADY BELL. (to Miſs Neville)

Let us withdraw from all this buſtle. Sir Harry, ſtep this way, I want you. [Exit with Miſs Neville, Lady Jane, and Sir Harry.

DASHWOULD.

This is all according to the fitneſs of things.

MILLAMOUR.

Something voluptuous in meaning well.

BYGROVE.

Dashwould, your ridicule is now in ſeaſon to expoſe ſuch a character. He is fair game, and hunt him down as you pleaſe.

LA ROUGE.

Ah! Monſieur Tartuffe. [Exit laughing.

MALVIL.

The fiends about me!—Mr. Bygrove, you are a thinking man, I appeal to you.

MILLAMOUR.

I appeal to this letter, Sir. (reads)

"Madam La Rouge."

"Miſs Neville has this day given me her hand in "marriage. I would not have it known for ſome "time. Conduct me to her apartment, unknown "to your ſervants. The way up the back ſtairs will "be beſt. Your ſecrecy ſhall be rewarded by"

"Martin Malvil."

OMNES.

OMNES.

Ha! ha! ha!

MALVIL.

The letter is forged——let me ſee it. (ſnatches at it)

DASHWOULD.

And I have another proof! this anonymous ſcrowl, written by your direction, and ſent to Miſs Neville, to give a ſtab to the character of Sir Harry. Do you deny it, Sir? Your ſecretary is now in the houſe; I brought him with me; he is ready to prove you the author of this mean, clandeſtine miſchief.

MALVIL.

All falſe; all a forgery. Where is this French impoſtor? Where is your witneſs, Sir? (to Daſhwould) I'll put them both to the proof, this moment.

[Exit.

DASHWOULD.

No private parlying. [Exit.

BYGROVE.

No; we muſt all hear. [Exit.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Yes; all muſt hear. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

My preſence may be neceſſary. [Going.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Millamour, ſtay and give me joy.

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

Of what?

Capt. BYGROVE.

The idol of my heart! To-morrow makes her mine.

MILLAMOUR.

Well, I give you joy. Who is ſhe?

Capt. BYGROVE.

My Lady Bell, thou dear fellow: come, let us go and ſee what they are about?

MILLAMOUR.

Let us go and ſee who ſhall cut the other's throat.

Capt. BYGROVE.

A pleaſant employment.

MILLAMOUR.

You ſhall tear this heart out, before you tear Lady Bell from me.

Capt. BYGROVE.

Very well; have your frolic—This works as I could wiſh. [Exit.

MILLAMOUR.

Deſpair and phrenzy! if ſhe is capable of a treachery like this——

Enter

Enter Lady BELL.

Lady BELL.

You have done ſome good at laſt, Mr. Millamour.

MILLAMOUR.

Lady Bell! (pauſes and looks at her) I once thought——but you will break my heart.

Lady BELL.

It will bend a little, but never break.

MILLAMOUR.

Will you liſten to me? There is a tyrant fair, and you have intereſt with her; you can ſerve me; all the joys of life are center'd there.

Lady BELL. (ſmiles aſide)

He is mine againſt the world. And ſo you want my intereſt? That's lucky, for I have a favour to requeſt of you.

MILLAMOUR.

Is there a favour in the power of man, you may not command at my hands?

Lady BELL.

You are very good, Sir; there is a perſon, but the levity of his temper——

MILLAMOUR. (aſide)

She means me——Your beauty will reclaim him.

Lady

Lady BELL. (ſmiles at him)
May I rely upon you?

MILLAMOUR.
What an angel look there was. And do you aſk the queſtion?

Lady BELL.
When ſincere affection——

MILLAMOUR.
It is generous to own it.

Lady BELL.
And ſince the impreſſion made by——

MILLAMOUR.
Do not heſitate.

Lady BELL.
Made by Captain Bygrove——

MILLAMOUR.
Made by Captain Bygrove (turns away)

Lady BELL.
That wounds deep—and if you will aſſiſt my fond, fond hopes,—It will be generous indeed.

MILLAMOUR.
This is a blow I never looked for—Yes, Ma'am, it it will be generous,—and in return, if you will intercede for me with Lady Bell——po! with a—with Lady Jane, I ſay—I ſay if you will intercede for me with Lady Jane——

Lady BELL.

Oh! by all means. And as I approve of your choice, (he walks away, ſhe follows him) I hope you will approve of mine; and by mutual acts of friendſhip, we may promote each other's happineſs.

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

Malvil is detected.

Lady BELL.

And Sir Harry has ſettled every thing with Miſs Neville. Go and wiſh him joy. (Exit Daſhwould) My ſweet friend will be happy at laſt. (going)

MILLAMOUR. (taking her hand)

But you won't marry the Captain?

Lady BELL.

Will you make intereſt for me?

MILLAMOUR.

How can you torment me thus?

Lady BELL.

You have done ſome ſervice, and you may now entertain a degree of hope. (ſmiling at him) But have you another copy of verſes for my aunt?

MIL-

MILLAMOUR.

How can you? (kiſſes her hand; Exit Lady Bell) ——She yields, and I am bleſſed indeed.

Enter BYGROVE, MALVIL, and Capt. BYGROVE.

BYGROVE.

The fact is too clear, Mr. Malvil.

MALVIL.

And ſhall the word of that French impoſtor——

MILLAMOUR.

She has acted fairly, Sir; what reparation can you make the lady whoſe ruin you have attempted?

MALVIL.

Mrs. Bromley promiſed her a fortune, and I have promiſed her marriage.

Enter DASHWOULD.

DASHWOULD.

And I forbid the banns. Sir Harry has concluded a match with Miſs Neville: I ſhould have thought him ridiculous, if he had not.

MALVIL.

That you will do, whether he deſerves it or not.

MILLAMOUR.

You, Sir, deſerve ſomething worſe than ridicule. You are thoroughly underſtood. Your tenderneſs for for your neighbour, is malignant curioſity; your half hints, that heſitate ſlander, ſpeak the louder; and your ſilence, that affects to ſuppreſs what you know, is a mute, that ſtrangles.

MALVIL.

The probity of my character, Sir——

DASHWOULD.

Ay, probity is the word. He has had pretty perquiſites from his probity; legacies, truſt money, and the confidence of families. For aught I ſee, probity is as good a trade as any a going.

OMNES.

Ha! ha! ha!

MALVIL.

The ſtill voice of truth is loſt: you are all in a combination.

BYGROVE.

And you have forced me to be of the number.

Enter Mrs. BROMLEY.

MALVIL.

Mrs. Bromley! you will judge with candour.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Oh! Sir, it is all too plain.

MAL-

MALVIL.

It is in vain to contend: I ſhall be cautious what I ſay of any of you: my heart is with you all.

[Exit.

BYGROVE.

Farewell, hypocrite!

OMNES.

Ha! ha! ha!

Enter Lady BELL, Miſs NEVILLE, Sir HARRY, and Lady JANE.

Lady BELL.

Here, Sir Harry, in the preſence of this company, I give you, in this friend of mine, truth, good ſenſe, and virtue. Take her, Sir, and now you have got a treaſure.

Sir HARRY. (to Miſs Neville)

It ſhall be my pride to raiſe you to that ſphere of life, which your merit, and your ſufferings from——

(looks at Mrs. Bromley)

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Why fix on me, Sir?

Sir HARRY.

They are much miſtaken, who can find no way of ſhewing their ſuperior rank, but by letting their weight fall on thoſe, whom fortune has placed beneath them.

DASH

DASHWOULD.

And that ſentiment, however I may rattle, I wiſh impreſſed upon all the patrons of poor relations, throughout his Majeſty's dominions.

Miſs NEVILLE.

Mrs. Bromley, I have much to ſay to you. My obligations to you, I ſhall never forget. I am not aſhamed, even in the preſence of Sir Harry, to own the diſtreſs in which you found me. If at any time I have given offence; if under your diſpleaſure, I have been impatient, you will allow for an education that raiſed me much above my circumſtances. That education ſhall teach me to act as becomes Sir Harry's Lady, with affection, with duty to him; and to you, madam, with gratitude, for that bounty which ſaved me from calamity and ruin.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

Your words overpower me. I feel that I have done wrong. I now ſee, that to demand in return, for favours conferred, an abject ſpirit, and mean compliance, is the worſt uſury ſociety knows of. I rejoice at your good fortune: your merit deſerves it.

(they embrace)

DASHWOULD.

Why this is as it ſhould be.——Mr. Bygrove, I hope ſoon to wiſh you joy.

BYGROVE.

Compared to Malvil, thou art an honeſt fellow, and I thank you.

DASHWOULD.

Millamour, is there no recompence for your virtue? In a modern comedy, you would be rewarded with a wife.

MILLAMOUR.

Lady Bell has more than poetical juſtice in her power. I wiſh Sir John were here: he would now ſee me reclaimed from every folly, by that lady.

Mrs. BROMLEY.

If it is ſo, I can now congratulate you both.

Lady BELL.

It is even ſo, aunt; the whim of the preſent moment. Mr. Millamour has ſerved my amiable friend, and I have promiſed him my hand——and ſo (holds up both hands) which will you have? Puzzle about it, and know your own mind if you can.

MILLAMOUR.

With rapture thus I ſnatch it to my heart.

Lady BELL.

Siſter, what Nunnery will you go to? Mr. Bygrove, command your ſon to take her.

Capt. BYGROVE.

That command I have obeyed already.

Lady

Lady JANE.

Since the truth muſt out; we made uſe of a ſtratagem to fix my ſiſter, and that gentleman.

Lady BELL.

To fix yourſelf, if you pleaſe. I knew you would be married before me.

MILLAMOUR.

Daſhwould, give me your hand. Your wit ſhall enliven our ſocial hours, and while I laugh with you at the events of life, you ſhall ſee me endeavour to weed out of my own mind every folly.

DASHWOULD.

You do me honour, Sir. And, if Mr. Bygrove will now and then give and take a joke——

BYGROVE.

As often as you pleaſe: but take my advice, and don't loſe your friend for your joke.

DASHWOULD.

By no means, Mr. Bygrove;——except now and then, when the friend is the worſt of the two.

MILLAMOUR.

Well, there is ſome weight in Mr. Bygrove's obſervation:

—and yet, as Daſhwould ſays, converſation without a zeſt of wit, may flatten into a ſort of inſipidity, and——

Lady BELL.

Oh! to be ſure: change your mind about it.

MILLAMOUR.

There is one ſubject, Lady Bell, upon which my mind will never change. The varieties of life, till now diſtracted my attention.

But when our hearts victorious beauty draws,
We feel its pow'r, and own its ſov'reign laws;
To that ſubſervient all our paſſions move,
And ev'n my conſtancy ſhall ſpring from love.

EPILOGUE.

Written by Mr. GARRICK.

Spoken by Mrs. MATTOCKS.

IF after Tragedy 'tis made a rule,
To jeſt no more, I'll be no titt'ring fool,
To jog you with a joke in Tragic doze,
And ſhake the dew-drops from the weeping roſe.
Prudes of each ſex affirm, and who denies?
That in each tear a whimp'ring Cupid lies:
To ſuch wiſe formal folk, my anſwer's ſimple;
A thouſand Cupids revel in a dimple!
From thoſe ſoft neſts, with laughter, out they ruſh,
Perch'd on your heads, like ſmall birds in a buſh.
Beauty reſiſtleſs in each ſmile appears:
Are you for dimples, ladies, or for tears?
Dare they in Comedy our mirth abridge?
Let us ſtand up for giggling privilege;
Aſſert our rights, that laughter is no ſin,
From the ſcrew'd ſimper, to the broad-fac'd grin.
So much for ſelf; now turn we to the Poet:
"KNOW YOUR OWN MIND."---Are any here who know it?
To know one's mind is a hard taſk indeed,
And harder ſtill for us, by all agreed.
Cards, balls, beaux, feathers, round the eddy whirling,
Change every moment, while the hair is curling.
The Greeks ſay---"Know Thyſelf"---I'm ſure I find,
I know Myſelf that I don't Know my Mind.
Know you your minds, wiſe Men?---Come, let us try.
I have a worthy cit there in my eye; (looking up)
Tho' he to ſneer at us takes much delight,
He cannot fix where he ſhall go to-night:
His pleaſure and his peace are now at ſtrife,
He loves his bottle, and he fears his wife.

He'l-

He'll quit this houſe, not knowing what to do;
The Shakeſpeare's Head firſt gives a pull or two,
But with a ſideling ſtruggle he gets through.
Darts acroſs Ruſſel-ſtreet: then with new charms,
The Syren, Luxury, his boſom warms,
And draws him in the vortex of the Bedford Arms.
Happy this night!---But when comes wife and ſorrow?
"To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow."
I ſee ſome laughers here; pray which of you
Know your own Minds?---in all this houſe but few!
Wits never know their Minds;---our Minor Bards,
Changing from bad to worſe, now ſpin Charades.
O'er Law and Phyſic we will draw a curtain;
There nothing but uncertainty is certain:
Grave looks, wigs, coats,---the Doctors now relinquiſh 'em
They're right,---from Undertakers to diſtinguiſh 'em.
The Courtiers, do 'em juſtice, never doubt,
Whether 'tis better to be in or out.
Some Patriots too, know their own mind and plan;
They're firmly fix'd, to get in when they can;
Gameſters don't waver; they all hazards run,
For ſome muſt cheat, and more muſt be undone.
Great Stateſmen know their minds, but ne'er reveal 'em;
We never knew their ſecrets, 'till we feel 'em.
Grant me a favour, Critics, don't ſay nay;
Be of one Mind with me, and like this Play;
Thence will two wonders riſe: t'Wits will be kind,
Nay more---behold a Woman Knows her Mind!

THE

THE SCHOOL

FOR

GUARDIANS:

A

COMEDY,

IN THREE ACTS.

Performed at the

THEATRE ROYAL

IN

COVENT-GARDEN.

——— Subitum, et miſerabile longum
Attendit Thymele; Thymele tunc ruſtica diſcit.

Juv.

PROLOGUE.

Spoken by Miſs ELLIOT.

MAY I intrude upon your patience for a minute?
Ladies and gentlemen, before the opening of the play,
Juſt to excuſe an accident, which I hope has no miſchief in it,
I fain, if you'll permit, a word or two would ſay.
I hope you'll not be angry; but we've got no prologue for to-night,
And ſo I thought it was beſt to come and tell ye all the truth downright.
I went to our Poet, and I ſpoke to him all I could,
But he ſaid he had not leiſure, tho' I know it's in his power if he would.
'A prologue, ma'am," ſays he!—"Yes, Sir, a prologue if you pleaſe."
And then I did ſo entreat the man, and beg, and pray, and teaze.
I told him, "You know, Sir, what a miſerable plight we all are in,
To frown upon the performers, when pit, box, and gallery begin;
Whu—go the catcalls—dub—dub—dub---each dreadfull critick's ſtick
Prólog'—throw him over—won't ye ha ſome orange chips
---Prólôgué---Cries o' London--Muſick!"
All this and more I ſaid, but he, determin'd ſtill,

In

In formal fuſtian thus declar'd his will.
" Oft have I tried" [ſeems puzzled]—ſomething about his ſtile,
And how he felt the town's indulgent ſmile.
" Were I again to try my ſcanty vein,
I'd beg protection for the feeble ſtrain.
But then to ſue—he paus'd and rubb'd his head—
To ſue—when fam'd MOLIERE the ſtage doth tread,
Were to profane the manes of the dead.
MOLIERE, of old, and ſtill with rapture ſeen,
The legiſlator of the comic ſcene!
To bid his SIMPLE GIRL aſſert the ſtage,
And, if ſhe pleaſes, ſtrive to mend the age,
This was my motive; this my only aim;
Heedleſs of gain; no candidate for fame.
An audience will weigh all in equal ſcales,
For juſtice, and not party, here prevails."
Thus ſpoke the bard, and then with long ſteps march'd away;
And now I am left alone to apologize for this night's play.
We'll ſtrive to make you laugh, if our aim be not perverted:
Pray, how d'ye find yourſelves?—Are ye in good humour, and willing to be diverted?
If you approve,
The Leidger Critic then no more I'll dread,
Who points his malice at a woman's head!

Who

Who drop by drop his venom doth diſtil,
While MOTHER DULLNESS guides the hireling's quill.
Lull'd in her lap, ſtrange wonders he deſcries,
And TERENCE ſeems—a Frenchman to his eyes!
From thence he iſſues foul decrees on plays,
Adorns with ſcandal, and lampoons with praiſe.
One ſmile from you defeats the ſland'rer's aim;
His calumny, like your APPLAUSE, is fame.
From your applauſe our mimic glories riſe;
In pleaſing you my whole ambition lies.

DRA-

Dramatis Perſonæ.

MEN.

BRUMPTON,	Mr. WOODWARD
BELFORD,	Mr. SMITH
OLDCASTLE,	Mr. SHUTER
LOVIBOND,	Mr. DUNSTALL.
BRISK,	Mr. DYER.
PETER,	Mr. MORGAN.

WOMEN.

MARY ANN,	Miſs ELLIOT.
HARRIET,	Miſs WILFORD.
BRIDGET,	Mrs. MAHON.

Scene LONDON.

THE School for Guardians, A COMEDY.

ACT the FIRST.

Enter BRUMPTON, and BRISK.

BRUMPTON.

IS my father gone out, Briſk?

BRISK.

Yes, Sir;—Sir Theodore is gone out.

BRUMPTON.

We have been pretty handſomely lectured here this morning, Briſk.

BRISK

BRISK.

Yes, Sir, we have had wherewithal to edify ourſelves. I ſuppoſe we ſhall lie at Tom Tilbury's at Bagſhot to-night, Sir.

BRUMPTON.

Where?

BRISK.

Tom Tilbury's, Sir; only juſt to break the neck of our journey: for I ſuppoſe now, you'll drop all thoughts of this other lady—I forget her name—Ay! Miſs Mary Ann Richley—ſhe has no chance now, I reckon, Sir.

BRUMPTON.

Why, you ſenſeleſs numſkull!—As ſure as I am Charles Brumpton, Eſq; ſhe ſhall be Mrs. Brumpton; and upon the death of my very good father, ſhe'll be a baronet's lady, that's all.

BRISK.

And yet there is ſome truth in what Sir Theodore ſays. Beauty is but a frail, periſhable ſort of a commodity; and if you are diſinherited for it, the lady's charms will not pay your poor ſervant, Briſk, his board-wages; a feature, or a ſmile can't go to market; a pawn-broker will lend nothing upon the tip of an ear: though indeed ſhe may mortage her perſon; but that I take it will be for her own advantage; we ſhall get nothing but a comely pair of horns by it, Sir, with ſubmiſſion.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

Why you talk a frothy kind of nothing at a tolerable rate, Briſk.

BRISK.

I have ſhewn you one ſide of the medal, now behold the reverſe, Sir. When you marry an ugly woman, there is no great pleaſure, to be ſure, in beholding her: but then the woman has ſome valuable parchments, ſuch as leaſes, bonds, and mortgages; and I, Sir, ſhall live in tolerable plight with you, which to ſo good a maſter——

BRUMPTON.

Leave prating, ſirrah, and do as I ordered you: put on your farmer's dreſs, go directly to the object I adore; let her know you are come from her guardian in the country, and have his orders to take her home under your care. Convey her ſafe to my arms, and I ſhall reward you.

BRISK.

But, Sir——

BRUMPTON.

No arguing: about it ſtreight.

BRISK.

You know how many blanketings and blows I have ſuffered in your ſervice, Sir.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

Sirrah, no words. Go and ſee who's at the door.

BRISK.

You have marred many an excellent plot of mine, Sir. You know you cannot help meddling, when I undertake a ſcheme. If you'll promiſe me, Sir, not to——

BRUMPTON.

Will you ſee who's at the door?

BRISK.

I am gone, Sir. [Exit.

BRUMPTON.

Ha! ha!—I ſhall moſt certainly carry her off. How Sir Theodore will be aſtoniſhed when he finds ſhe is an heireſs! ha! ha!---it is the pleaſanteſt adventure.

Enter BELFORD.

BELFORD.

Brumpton, good-morrow!----always in ſpirits, I ſee.

BRUMPTON.

My dear Belford, nothing depreſſes my ſpirits; though you thought they were too high laſt night, and were for letting me a little blood. You make no-nothing of diſplaying an ell of ſword-blade in defence of your miſtreſs's top-knot.

BELFORD.

Why you know I love too tenderly to bear the teſt of raillery: it is the infirmity of my temper; why would you put me to it?

BRUMPTON.

And you that know my turn of mind, why would you be angry with me? If in your phraſe I am a coxcomb, with all my heart, i'faith! but take this along with you; what you mean as a term of reproach, I receive as a compliment to the materials nature has been pleaſed to compound in this happy frame of mine.

BELFORD.

If ſelf-applauſe be philoſophy, you have a comfortable ſhare.

BRUMPTON.

I have, Sir, and while my happineſs is preſerved by it, keep you the gravity and good ſenſe, that make you too refined to be pleaſed, too wiſe to be merry, and too knowing to be contented. I am in a fair way to be ſucceſsful, without any trouble at all; you are likely to be moſt ſcurvily diſappointed after a world of pains. An humble bow, which my dancing-maſter taught me, while I laughed at him; a faſhionable coat, for which, if my taylor is ever paid, he will laugh at me; an intriguing ſnuff-box, and an apt valet de chambre, all theſe make love for me, and——

BELFORD.

And you aſſume the merit of the conqueſt.

BRUMPTON.

Oh! yes, when the trouble is over, I take the reward. Did you ever know a general officer, who, when the horſe and the foot, and the right and left wing have carried the day for him, did not claim to himſelf both the honour and the booty? But you make a toil of a pleaſure: love, which to me is a ſcene of delight, to you is a drudgery; your temper grows as ſour as a prude's when the ſermon is long; and as hot as a Welſhman, if you laugh at his pedigree; or a profeſſed ſharper, if you doubt his honour, after he has cogged the dice, and picked your pocket of your money.

BELFORD.

Why I own I am piqued, and naturally, If any friend of mine, out of mere ſpleen, ſpeak detractingly of the perſon I admire. Abſent I ſee her, hear her, and my imagination gloats on her every charm.

BRUMPTON.

And you are ſo eaſily alarmed, that little difficulties are the Alps and Pireneans in your way. Now my faith in theſe matters removes mountains. But indeed in all things we are oppoſite characters: you ſigh, I ſing; you fret, I am gay; you upon a diſappointment, "Furies, death, and rage!"——I burſt into a laugh, and what a whimſical world we live in?—ha! ha!——But come, I will hear your melancholy ſtory. Well, the old dragon, I ſuppoſe, watches the Heſperian fruit.

BEL-

BELFORD.

He does, Sir: he keeps her locked up, as a miſer does his gold, not to be made uſe of till his death, and then to fall into hands that won't know the value of it. She is inacceſſible, and her guardian, old Lovibond, propoſes to marry her himſelf.

BRUMPTON.

And ſo like the tyrant of old, intends to tack a living and dead body together.

BELFORD.

Even ſo: my dear Brumpton, there ſhould be an act of parliament to hinder theſe old fellows from ſtopping the propagation of the ſpecies.

BRUMPTON.

You are too hard upon 'em: they are ſeldom guilty of that miſchief. I have known 'em have twins at a birth; that is, when ſome ſuch coxcomb as myſelf gives them a helping hand; and then the old fellow cocks his hat upon it, and totters about ſo vigorouſly, wondering how the babes reſemble him in every particular; whilſt the mother knows, that ſhe followed the example of the Grecian painter, and took a feature from every one of her acquaintance. If he prevents your marrying her, take your revenge that way.

BELFORD.

How abſurd! her heart I am ſure is mine. I uſed to viſit there; but now no admittance.

BRUMPTON.

Now my buſineſs goes on without any trouble or difficulty. My old dragon is in the country, and has left his fair ward, the ſweeteſt girl, my dear Belford——

BELFORD.

You deſcribed her yeſterday but few removes from an idiot.

BRUMPTON.

Pardon me: ſhe is ſimple indeed, but ſuch a ſimplicity! It juſt ſerves to ſhew that injuſtice has been done her in her education, but in her every turn ſhe gives ſuch tokens of ſenſibility! ſhe has beauty without knowing it; certain wild graces, rather than accompliſhments, and talents inſtead of ſenſe.

BELFORD.

Po! a mere ruſtic beauty.

BRUMPTON.

There now, derogating from her merit, and yet I am calm! The truth is ſhe has been brought up in the country, and wickedly kept in ignorance, that ſhe might fall an eaſy prey to her guardian. But I have raiſed a ſpirit in her.

BELFORD.

And how the devil did you gain acceſs to her?

BRUMPTON.

I was going to tell you. Old Neſtor is out of town, and and has left her in the care of the two verieſt ſimpletons that ever whiſtled for want of thought at a country fair: but gold, Sir, gold, that ſpeaks all languages, and adapts itſelf to all capacities, has pleaded moſt eloquently for me. But, come, I poſitively muſt leave you.

BELFORD.

Nay, if it muſt be ſo——

BRUMPTON.

My dear Belford, Cupid direct your arrows——

[Exeunt.

SCENE a Street.

Enter LOVIBOND, and OLDCASTLE.

LOVIBOND.

And but this moment returned, Mr. Oldcaſtle!

OLDCASTLE.

Juſt this moment ſtepped out of the machine.

LOVIBOND.

Well! and now I ſuppoſe you have prudently laid aſide all thoughts of matrimony.

OLDCASTLE.

You are a comical man, brother Lovibond. I have taken my meaſures; to-morrow makes me a bridegroom, and my fair ward, Miſs Mary Ann, a bride.

LOVIBOND.

And a little time will make you——

OLDCASTLE.

Happy: tho', by that ſignificant look, you have your doubts.

LOVIBOND.

I have, Sir: I have a ſhrewd gueſs that——

OLDCASTLE.

Then you'll be out in your gueſs.

LOVIBOND.

I wiſh your horns a'n't out firſt.

OLDCASTLE.

Well ſaid, and without any apprehenſion for yourſelf. You are ſtill determined to marry Mary Ann's ſiſter Harriet I ſuppoſe.

LOVIBOND.

That's quite another buſineſs; what I do, is no rule for your actions.

OLDCASTLE.

It is as I ever ſaid: each man is ſtill looking at the hump upon his neighbour's back, but never thinks of caſting an eye over his own ſhoulder. I warrant me now you, in your grand climacteric, will tell me I am old.

LO-

LOVIBOND.

Full ten years before me in the race of life. Beſides, you are a ſuperannurated batchelor; a ſtranger to the ways of wedlock. I am enured to the ſervice. Your ſiſter, Mr. Oldcaſtle, could have told you what a deſperate good huſband I was. But, lack a day! you begin late. Mercy on your forehead, ſay I, mercy on your forehead!

OLDCASTLE.

How blind ſome people are when they have taken a thing in their heads!—ha! ha!

LOVIBOND.

Well! well! laugh on. But you that have been for ever a cenſor of your neighbours, for ever ſleering and jibing at the married ſtate——

OLDCASTLE.

And a pleaſant topic it is! why matrimony affords a little comedy in every family one knows. Now the education I have given Mary Ann———

LOVIBOND.

Is the worſt in the world.

OLDCASTLE.

The very beſt! I have trained her up in plain ſimplicity. Woman's wit teems with contrivances to diſgrace her huſband. Yet you would educate Harriet in this profligate town!

LOVIBOND.

Ay, and I have taught her to know right from wrong.

OLDCASTLE.

You have indulged her in every whimſy this fertile town affords.

LOVIBOND.

I have ſhewn her the world.

OLDCASTLE.

Have not you carried her to plays?

LOVIBOND.

To ſee folly ridiculed.

OLDCASTLE.

To profligate comedies?

LOVIBOND.

The ſtage is the ſchool of virtue.

OLDCASTLE.

The ſchool of ſin and impudence!

LOVIBOND.

Where vice undergoes the laſh of ſatire.

OLDCASTLE.

Where vice is made alluring, provoking!

Lo-

LOVIBOND.

Where young ladies may learn——.

OLDCASTLE.

The uſe of dark-cloſets, back-ſtairs, and ladders of rope.

LOVIBOND.

Where they may learn to put on the veil of modeſty.

OLDCASTLE.

To put on the breeches, and eſcape from their guardians.

LOVIBOND.

Where they are taught to reſpect grey-headed authority!

OLDCASTLE.

To make a cuckold of authority! I know the ways of 'em all! their cards, routs, operas, Soho-aſſemblies, all contrivances to excite curioſity, kindle deſire, prompt inclination, and ſend 'em all dancing a jig to deſtruction.

LOVIBOND.

Common-place invective! Harriet will know how to avoid——

OLDCASTLE.

She will know how to deceive you.

LOVIBOND.

She will have too much honour.

OLDCASTLE.

She will have too much wit. Now Mary-Ann has no wild notions, and of courſe no dangerous curioſity.

LOVIBOND.

Her curioſity is to come. She will fall a prey to the firſt powdered coxcomb that bows to her.

OLDCASTLE.

Her ſimplicity will preſerve her.

LOVIBOND.

But when the ſerpents of this town begin to whiſper in her ear——

OLDCASTLE.

They'll have no opportunity. She is ſnug in a little box of a houſe, which I have taken in the name of Mr. Biddulph. I have another lodging in my own name, where I tranſact my affairs. Nobody will ſee her; and when the nine day's wonder is over, I ſhall pack off to the country, and ſo eſcape from impertinence.

LOVIBOND.

Well! well! I can't but laugh at your ſyſtem of education! Ha! ha! marry her if you will; and then, on account of your age and infirmities, you may may do the buſineſs of your office by deputy. Ha! ha! a plan of ſimplicity! [Exit.

OLDCASTLE.

Brother Lovibond, a good day to you——I wiſh you ſucceſs——Ha! ha! a town-education for a young girl!

Enter BRUMPTON.

BRUMPTON.

How her old goaler will look when he returns to town, and finds ſhe has broke priſon!——Hey! is not that Mr. Oldcaſtle?

OLDCASTLE.

Mr. Brumpton!——I rejoice to ſee you.

BRUMPTON.

My dear friend, you are come in the very criſis of my fate.

OLDCASTLE.

Recover your ſenſes a little, and tell me at your leiſure what is this mighty buſineſs.

BRUMPTON.

Oh! buſineſs of ſuch a nature!

OLDCASTLE.

You are in requeſt among the ladies, no doubt——Now will he lie like an attorney's clerk. (aſide) You are going to help ſome worthy gentleman to an heir to his eſtate, I warrant me.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

I am going to help my father to a grandſon.

OLDCASTLE.

Going to be married!

BRUMPTON.

This day may perhaps crown my joys. Some certain fumblers at this end of the town, who were a little alarmed at the proportions of this leg, intend to light their windows upon it; the Court of Aldermen is preparing all demonſtrations of joy; and their unhappy wives are going into deep mourning upon the occaſion!

OLDCASTLE.

The ſame confident fop he ever was! Well, and my friend Sir Theodore, what ſays he to all this?

BRUMPTON.

You know his way; the ſame old crabbed humour. He has made a match for me elſewhere with one that——I would not deny the lady her merit——ſhe preſerves and pickles well, and is a very notable keeper of accounts.

OLDCASTLE.

She has a fortune, I preſume.

BRUMPTON.

Does not want acres.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

And you prefer one without any.

BRUMPTON.

You miſtake me! ſhe's an heireſs; it is not clear that ſhe is of age, but as ſoon as ſhe comes to years of diſcretion——

OLDCASTLE.

Then ſhe may play the fool as faſt as ſhe will. But how did you bring this about, pray?

BRUMPTON.

An old way that I have: I came, ſaw, and conquered. I ſaw her at her window——Such blooming ſweetneſs! Her eyes were through my heart at once: love inſpired me with due courage.

OLDCASTLE.

That was right: a bold ſtroke for a wife.

BRUMPTON.

I drank tea with her the very next evening. I muſt indeed admit, that her underſtandiug is not the moſt accompliſhed.

OLDCASTLE.

So beſt: never marry a wit.

BRUMPTON.

She is at preſent rather in a ſtate of ignorance: but from thoſe blue eyes ſhe occaſionally darts ſuch glances, glances, as beſpeak a mind ſuſceptible of the higheſt refinement.

OLDCASTLE.

Where does ſhe live?

BRUMPTON.

In the very next ſtreet.

OLDCASTLE.

What that ſtreet there?

BRUMPTON.

Yes, that: under the care of the verieſt muck-worm!

OLDCASTLE.

He means me, I fear. (aſide) And her name, pray?

BRUMPTON.

Miſs Mary Ann Richley.

OLDCASTLE.

Wounds! what a diſcovery here is! (aſide)

BRUMPTON.

Her guardian's name is Biddulph. Perhaps you may know him.

OLDCASTLE.

No, not I. The young rake-hell! (aſide)

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

He means to abuſe his truſt, and confine youth and beauty within the arms of age and uglineſs. There's an old rogue for you! Does not he deſerve to be hanged?

OLDCASTLE.

What a young villain! (aſide)

BRUMPTON.

I beg your pardon: I did not hear.

OLDCASTLE.

I am ſeized with an ugly fit of coughing—— (coughs) But you ſhould conſider; the marriage-act is very ſtrict, and requires the conſent of prudent people.

BRUMPTON.

Po! that's nothing. Abuſe Scotland as they will, it enables us to evade the laws of England. Well now, adieu!——Oh! I forgot to tell you. She'll be mine this very day. Briſk, my fellow, who is a footman of talents, is to go to her as a tenant from the country, come to town with old Biddulph's commands to carry her down with him in the fly. She is ſo ſimple ſhe will believe it; and the oafs about her will bite like gudgeons; and ſo ——ha! ha!——I kindle into rapture. I muſt fly to know the happy tidings.—Did you ever know ſo happy an adventure? [Exit.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE. (alone)

I never knew ſo abandoned a young profligate, nor ſo vile an adventure!—I'll ſtep and make ſure of Mary-Ann this moment. [Exit.

SCENE LOVIBOND'S Houſe.

Enter HARRIET.

HARRIET.

To be locked up in this manner with an old rogue of a guardian!—Mr. Belford! Mr. Belford! why won't you be my deliverer? He knows I like him; I have told him ſo a thouſand times; that is my eyes have told him ſo; and yet he undertakes nothing. Ah! my dear protector! (ſeeing Lovibond)

Enter LOVIBOND.

LOVIBOND.

My bloſſom!——my lovely little ward! to-morrow makes you the queen of my heart. But you muſt be mild in authority, for you know——

HARRIET.

Yes, I know how tender you have been. Your confining me here ſo many days, is to me a proof of the tendereſt love.

LOVIBOND.

Yes, it is a mark of my affection.

HARRIET.

There are many reaſons why I ſhould not venture abroad; more than you dream of.

Lo-

LOVIBOND.

You alarm me: what reaſons?

HARRIET.

Why the danger is——No——you'll be for fighting the odious man.

LOVIBOND.

No——I'll not fight——I'll live for you.

HARRIET.

But will you follow my advice, and ſpeak to him calmly, without paſſion?

LOVIBOND.

I will. Let me hear: what's the matter?

HARRIET.

Why that Mr. Belford, whoſe viſits you uſed to encourage—

LOVIBOND.

I have not liked him a good while—what of him?

HARRIET.

Oh! he's a wicked man. He has vile deſigns in his head, and would fain have me liſten to his propoſals.

LOVIBOND.

The impudence of the young men of this age!

HARRIET.

Your back is no ſooner turned, than he raps at the door, and at the windows, and diſgraces me with all the neighbours. My character will be ruined, (pretends to cry) unleſs you find ſome method to—

LOVIBOND.

Don't be alarmed, my ſweet: I'll bar my doors, and you ſhan't ſtir out this twelvemonth.

HARRIET.

That won't do.

LOVIBOND.

Then you ſhall never go out at all.

HARRIET.

That's ſome comfort. But in the mean time to have my reputation blaſted by an abandoned libertine—(ſhe cries) Cæſar's wife ſhould not only be virtuous, but free from ſuſpicion.

LOVIBOND.

The ſenſible girl! this is owing to her education. Her ſiſter Mary-Ann could not make ſuch a remark. I'll go and ſwear the peace againſt him.

HARRIET.

I wiſh you would.

Lo-

LOVIBOND.

I'll do it directly. I'll let him know by a juſtice's warrant that Cæſar's wife is not to be trifled with.

HARRIET.

And pray tell him, I hate him; that he may come as often as he will under my window, but it will be to no purpoſe, for I ſhall not endeavour to let him in.

LOVIBOND.

He ſhall hear it.

HARRIET.

Let him know that, though he is young, and handſome, all his charms are loſt upon me.

LOVIBOND.

I'll do it.

HARRIET.

Tell him you have been a father to me: that I conſider you ſtill as my father, and that I think it unnatural to love giddy young men, when I can be ſo much better off with you.

LOVIBOND.

He ſhall hear it on every ſide of his ears.

HARRIET.

Ay, but without loſs of time. I ſhan't be eaſy till he knows my mind.

LOVIBOND.

Nor I. It is fit he ſhould know your mind.

HARRIET.

Yes, and tell him, if he ſhould come when you are out, not all his winning ways ſhall prevail on me to run away with him.

LOVIBOND.

You have charmed me; tranſported me; raviſhed me; get up ſtairs. I'll ſeek him this moment——Ha! ha!——this all ſprings from her good ſenſe: this is knowing right from wrong——ha! ha! [Exit.

HARRIET.

Be ſure you tell him every word——and if Mr. Belford does but underſtand every word as I intend it, then I may ſtill wing my flight to his dear arms. A new ſcheme this of mine! But love inſpired it, and love may crown it with ſucceſs. [Exit.

SCENE OLDCASTLE'S Houſe.

Enter PETER and BRIDGET.

PETER.

Yes, yes, Bridget; the gentleman's generous enow, for a matter o'that.

BRIDGET.

And pray, Peter, do the London folk always give money money to the like of we, as often as they come in or out of the houſe?

PETER.

Ay! zure, and the ſarving folk eall it wails. Why, Bridget, poor ſarvants would not be able to ape all their maſter's follies, and powder like fine gentry, and curſe and ſwear like Lords, an ſo be every body did not give at ſtreet door more than any thing they get in the houſe is worth.

BRIDGET.

La! well that's pure, ſure enow!

PETER.

As to me, do ye zee, I does not care how often the gentleman comes, and for a matter o'that, I does not care how long maſter ſtays in the country.

BRIDGET.

Theſe London ways are comical, that's for ſure. (a rap at the door) More griſe to the mill. Go and open the door, Peter.

PETER.

Go yourſelf, an you go to that.

BRIDGET.

I ſhall budge none, not I.

PETER.

Nor I, faith and troth! (another rap)

BRIDGET.

Law, how can you be ſo croſs?

PETER.

You put all upon me, that's your way. Who's at the door?

OLDCASTLE. (within)

Open the door, you varlets, open the door.

BRIDGET.

Oh! it's maſter. I'll go.

PETER.

Maſter!——then I'll go.

BRIDGET.

Stand out of the way, can't you?

PETER.

Stand away yourſelf: I be ready, ben't I?

BRIDGET.

Farther a field, will you?

OLDCASTLE. (rapping)

Within there, open the door, I ſay.

BRIDGET.

Call here to Peter: he won't let a body.

PETER.

Nobody ſhall but I. (opens the door) Sarvant, maſter.

Enter OLDCASTLE.

BRIDGET.

Welcome home, maſter.

OLDCASTLE.

Why am I to wait thus?

PETER.

PETER.

It was all her doings.

BRIDGET.

It was all his doings as well as I.

OLDCASTLE.

Peace, numſkulls! how is every body at home?

PETER.

Charmingly well.

BRIDGET.

All in pure health, praiſe for every thing; and Miſs Mary Ann ſings about the houſe like a little bird in a cage.

OLDCASTLE.

Has not ſhe been melancholy ſince I went into the country?

BRIDGET.

No, Lord love her, not ſhe.

OLDCASTLE.

No! (in a paſſion)

BRIDGET.

Yes!—how terrible he looks!

OLDCASTLE.

Did not ſhe long for my return?

PETER.

Hugeouſly! ſo we did all.

OLDCASTLE.

Vixen! jade! villain! raſcal!

PETER.

I'm down o'my knees——

BRIDGET.

So be I—merciful father, how——

OLDCASTLE.

You have obeyed my orders, have you?

PETER.

He'll murder us both, as ſure as a gun.

OLDCASTLE.

What you are ſneaking away, are you? Oh! it's all too true. Come back, or——

BRIDGET.

Yes, Sir.

PETER.

No, Sir.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! Mary Ann! Mary Ann!——I could never have imagined---call Mary Ann hither——

BOTH.

Yes, Sir. (they run out)

OLDCASTLE.

Now will they plot, and put their heads together —Mary Ann!---Mary Ann!---Oh! here ſhe comes.

Enter

Enter MARY ANN, playing with a cup and ball, and ſinging.

MARY-ANN.

So, you be come, I ſee.

OLDCASTLE.

Yes, I am come home.

MARY-ANN.

Better late than never. I began to think as how you had forgot poor I. I expected you all the live-long day, ſo I did; and there did not go by a coach or a cart, or a horſe or an aſs, but I thought it was you. Ah! I am glad you're come. What's the matter? Ben't you well?

OLDCASTLE.

You have been very well, I hope, ſince I left you.

MARY-ANN.

Oh! yes, purely. Neither ſick nor ſorry, not I. By goles, that is not true neither, for laſt night——

OLDCASTLE.

Laſt night!---what of laſt night?

MARY-ANN.

Little Pompey barked ſo all night long, I could not ſleep a wink.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

Is that all? You have not been out any where, have you?

MARY-ANN.

Out!---law, where ſhould I go? I don't like going out in this ſtrange outlandiſh place. I like the country better by half.

OLDCASTLE.

Well! well! you ſhall go back ſoon.

MARY-ANN.

But then mayn't I go and ſee ſiſter Harriet firſt? an ill natured thing that's what ſhe is: ſhe has not been to ſee poor I, ever ſince I came to the great town.

OLDCASTLE.

You ſhall ſee her. So you paſſed your time very merrily!

MARY-ANN.

Never better in all my days. But you don't ſeem glad to ſee a body.

OLDCASTLE.

Yes, yes; I am glad to ſee you. The little Jezabel won't tell me a word (aſide)—ſhall I tax her with it directly, or wait a little longer to ſee her cunning? —Let you and I go and chat a little together above ſtairs.

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

Ah! you look croſs. With all heart, I'll go —one, two, three, and away, [Exit.

OLDCASTLE.

The little frippery, how ſhe carries it off!——I burn, I'm in a fever: I have had the graſs cut under my feet. Oh! the young Magdalen! The ſly iniquity! Mary-Ann, come back I ſay,

Enter MARY-ANN.

MARY-ANN.

Ah! I ſee you don't love me——

OLDCASTLE.

You are much miſtaken, draw a chair---ſit down ---Well! and how have you paſſed your time in my abſence?

MARY-ANN.

As well as any thing.

OLDCASTLE.

Have you any news?

MARY-ANN.

News!---law, not I---fikins, I fib tho'. I have news to tell you.

OLDCASTLE.

Have you? Well!

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

Little kitten's dead.

OLDCASTLE.

Indeed!

MARY-ANN.

Ah! if you had ſeen all its pretty little tricks, and how it played about. It grieved me to loſe ſhe. But ſquirrel's well.

OLDCASTLE.

Is he?

MARY-ANN.

Yes, and ſo is mackaw.

OLDCASTLE.

Ay! that's good news.

MARY-ANN.

Yes, and I have marked three ſhirts, and hemmed five handkerchiefs.

OLDCASTLE.

Mighty well! (pauſes and looks at her earneſtly) Mary Ann, this is a wide and dangerous world we live in: ſcandal, malice, and detraction are ever flying about, conſtantly on the wing, and ſpreading pernicious tales to the ruin of every character.

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

You frighten a body, you talk ſo.

OLDCASTLE.

Draw near, ſweet, draw near. Some impertinent neighbours have whiſpered---but I did not believe 'em—they have ſaid, that while I was in the country, a young gentleman frequented here, and was well received, Mary Ann. But I have laid a wager there was no foundation for any ſuch idle givings out.

MARY-ANN.

How much have you laid?

OLDCASTLE.

Five pounds to four.

MARY-ANN.

All that! make a hedge of it, as you did at the horſe-race.

OLDCASTLE.

Why ſo?

MARY-ANN.

Cauſe, you'll loſe.

OLDCASTLE.

Then there was a young gentleman here?

MARY-ANN.

As ſure as a gun. He was here for ever and for ever, morning, noon, and night.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

But, my little lambkin, did not I forbid any viſits? I won't be certain; but if my memory does not fail me——

MARY-ANN.

Oh! for a matter o'that, you may be certain: you did forbid it, ſure enough.

OLDCASTLE.

And why was I diſobeyed, my dear?

MARY-ANN.

It's the ſurpriſingeſt thing in the world: I'll tell you all about it.

OLDCASTLE.

That's right; let us hear.

MARY-ANN.

I was ſitting in the balcony, thinking of no earthly thing, and he paſſed by on the other ſide of the way —Ah! he looked as handſome as an angel, and ſo he made me a low bow: I bluſhed up to my very ears, and ſo I got up, and made a low curteſy; and ſo he kiſſed his hand, and I could not help ſmiling at that, and ſo he bowed again and again, and I curteſyed again and again, and then he walked up the ſtreet, and down the ſtreet, and to and fro, and backwards and forwards; and would you believe it? He did not miſs a time making me a bow with all the good nature in the world, and ſo I was as good natured as he, and if he had ſtaid all night long, I ſhould have ſtaid ſtaid too, for I thought it would not be right to be outdone in civility.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! thoſe damned balconies, I always hated them. Well! well! go on, Mary Ann.

MARY-ANN.

Well, and ſo the next day a large, comely fat gentlewoman came to me, and ſhe had three or four bandboxes full of fine things, and ſhe ſaid ſhe had orders to give me my choice of charming lace, and charming ribbons———

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! the execrable procureſs! (aſide)

MARY-ANN.

You are very pretty, my dear. ſays ſhe, but it's a pity you ſhould be mewed up here. And then ſhe offered me to take me home to her own houſe, and ſaid ſhe would dizen me out with diamonds, and then a lord would fall in love with me.

OLDCASTLE.

The infernal ſorcereſs! (aſide)

MARY-ANN.

And then could you think of her goodneſs? Indeed I can't help loving her for it. She offered me to go and meet the young gentleman at her houſe. I thanked her, and took it very kind, but I did not care to go to ſtrange places, and ſo I ſaid the gentleman might come here if he would.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! the travelling milliner! (aſide) Well, and did he come?

MARY-ANN.

That he did ſure enough. And he ſaid the very ſight of me cured him of his wounds. Ah! I am ſure you can't blame me, for I could not let him die, ſo I could not. I almoſt cried my eyes out when little kitten died.

OLDCASTLE.

Brother Lovibond is right. Oh! I dread the reſt. (aſide)

MARY-ANN.

Ah!—but you are angry now——

OLDCASTLE.

No, not angry. Well? how did he behave?

MARY-ANN.

Ah! he had ſuch a pretty ſmile, and he gave me this twee: and he gave Bridget and Peter whole handfuls of money.

OLDCASTLE.

What did he ſay?

MARY-ANN.

Oh! the prettieſt words in the world.

OLDCASTLE.

But he did not touch you?

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

By goles, I beg your pardon for that, but he did, though.

OLDCASTLE.

I gueſſed ſo. (aſide)—Go on.

MARY-ANN.

He kiſſed me a thouſand and a thouſand times.

OLDCASTLE.

Daggers! daggers! daggers! (aſide)

MARY-ANN.

And ſqueezed my hand ſo tenderly.

OLDCASTLE.

Poiſon! wormwood! wormwood!

MARY-ANN.

He took me round the neck.

OLDCASTLE.

I thought as much (aſide)——proceed.

MARY-ANN,

And round the waiſt, and he——

OLDCASTLE.

Now, now; now for the worſt.—How I tremble!

MARY-ANN.

What's the matter with you?

OLDCASTLE.

Nothing——we ſhall have ſome rain——my corn ſhoots; that's all. Did you do nothing more to cure his wounds?

MARY-ANN.

Look you there now! you are angry: ought I to have done more?

OLDCASTLE.

No; enough of all conſcience; but, are you ſure this was all?

MARY-ANN.

He gave me this fan, and a pair of ear-rings; and I am ſure it was very civil of him to ſhew ſo much good nature to a ſtranger.

OLDCASTLE.

Mary Ann, Mary Ann, all his ſmooth words, all his tenderneſs, all his ſmiles, were baits to entrap you, to enſnare you to your ruin.

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but he told me to the contrary, over and over, and over again.

OLDCASTLE.

I know the world: it was all for your deſtruction. Go up to your room: all this ſhall be explained to you.

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but you are out of humour with a body.

OLDCASTLE.

Do as I bid you.

MARY-ANN.

Yes, that's what I will. By goles, he's a ſweet gentleman, for all you, that's what he is. (aſide)

[Exit.

OLDCASTLE. (alone)

What an eſcape have I had! and yet her an ingenuous manner of confeſſing all, gives me ſome hopes. I'll read her a lecture, and then I'll go and let Sir Theodore Brumpton know what a villain his ſon is. Oh! Mary Ann, Mary Ann.

End of the FIRST ACT.

ACT the SECOND.

Scene LOVIBOND'S.

Enter HARRIET.

HARRIET.

HOW my heart beats! poſt haſte, gallop! gallop! and no wonder. It's a dangerous experiment I have tried. Could I but convey this letter to Mr. Belford—huſh! here comes my turn-key!

Enter LOVIBOND.

LOVIBOND.

Well Harriet, I have executed your commiſſion.

HARRIET.

How did he receive it?

LOVIBOND.

Terribly mortified, tho' I thought I marked, as he went off, an odd ſort of a dry conſtrained ſmile.

HARRIET.

But I ſhall have no more reaſon to complain of him, I hope.

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha! I almoſt pitied the poor devil.

HAR-

HARRIET.

He deſerves no pity, Mr. Lovibond.

LOVIBOND.

I believe it. But he knows he was engaged in a vain purſuit; he ſaid ſo himſelf, and bid me aſſure you he would loſe no more time.

HARRIET.

That revives me.

LOVIBOND.

He will hardly come this way again.

HARRIET.

I don't know what to ſay to that. (aſide) I dread the contrary. I am afraid he will not renounce me ſo eaſily as you may imagine.

LOVIBOND.

And, pray, what reaſon have you for thinking ſo?

HARRIET.

I have terrible proofs againſt him. While you was out, he came again under my window.

LOVIBOND.

Ay!

HARRIET.

I ran away at the ſight of him. But the window being open, he flung this little box into the room with a letter in it.

LOVIBOND.

A letter in it!

HARRIET.

Yes, the wicked contriver! a letter in it. I ran to the window to throw it to him again, but he was gone, and then it occurred to me that it might not be quite ſo prudent to throw it into the ſtreet, leſt it ſhould fall into the hands of malicious people, who might miſinterpret appearances to my diſadvantage.

LOVIBOND.

That was wiſely judged.

HARRIET.

I have been ever ſince thinking that it ought to be returned, and if I had a proper perſon———

LOVIBOND.

Who ſo proper as myſelf? Let me have it.

HARRIET.

No, no; it would affront him more if delivered by a common porter.

LOVIBOND.

Excuſe me, I am the fitteſt perſon. A letter in a box! what contrivances they have! I'll take care he ſhall have it, and he will look ſo ſilly when he perceives that all his ſchemes are baffled.

HARRIET.

Why indeed, it will aſtoniſh him the more, if you deliver it.

Lo-

LOVIBOND.

So it will—ha! ha!——it will be a rare ſtroke of revenge. Ha! ha!

HARRIET. (laughing)

The neweſt that ever was.

LOVIBOND.

I like it of all things. But firſt let me ſee the contents of his letter.

HARRIET.

Dear heart, not for the world. Would you give the horrid man room to imagine that a girl of character would ſo much as open the ſeal of his odious letter? Let me adviſe, Mr. Lovibond; to return it unopened will be the ſtrongeſt mark of contempt, and the greateſt affront that can be put upon him.

LOVIBOND.

There is ſomething in that. Your wiſdom charms me. You endear yourſelf to me more and more every hour.

HARRIET.

Uſe your own diſcretion whether to open it or not. But the reaſons I have given——

LOVIBOND.

Are to me concluſive. I'll about this buſineſs directly. Ha! ha! we'll put the greateſt affront in the world upon him. Ha! ha! the trueſt mark of contempt, ha! ha! good-by, roſe-bud, good-by. [Exit.

HARRIET.

Yes, yes, let him have it unopened. If this plot takes, I ſhall have my utmoſt wiſh. And making him my go-between in the buſineſs, gives life and ſpirit to the plot. If I can out-wit him, I ſhall be happy at laſt. [Exit.

Scene OLDCASTLE'S Houſe.

Enter OLDCASTLE, and MARY-ANN.

MARY-ANN.

A mortal ſin!

OLDCASTLE.

Yes, a mortal ſin! you are unexperienced in theſe matters. It is a ſin, child, to accept of preſents from men, twees, fans, and Bruſſels lace. Bruſſels lace has done as much miſchief as the forbidden fruit.---I wiſh I had bred her up a Quaker. (aſide) Mind my words: to indulge wanton young men in liberties with your perſon; to let 'em fold you round the waiſt, play with your neck, and print laſcivious kiſſes on your lips, is the ſure road to deſtruction.

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but I don't believe that---and a pity it ſhould, for, (ſmiling at him) it is very agreeable. I am ſure I like it better than queſtions and commands, or hide and go ſeek, either.

OLDCASTLE.

I tell you they are all abominable things till the marriage-ceremony is performed.

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

And is it allowed then?

OLDCASTLE.

Then, and then only, Mary Ann.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling)

By goles, I am glad to hear that, and ſo marry me as ſoon as you will.

OLDCASTLE.

Hold, beware, Mary Ann. I marry you for myſelf only: you muſt deſpiſe and deteſt all others.

MARY-ANN.

I wiſh you would let me go and feed my birds.

OLDCASTLE.

Compoſe your thoughts, I ſay. Marriage is an holy inſtitution, and exacts rigorous duties on the part of the wife. You muſt love, honour, and obey your huſband. Be upon your guard; the enemy of woman-kind is for ever prowling about in queſt of prey, always ready to ſeduce, to murder, and devour, and ſwallow up in the jaws of ruin every frail young creature that comes in his way.

MARY-ANN. (burſts into tears)

But they ſhan't ſwallow me up, ſo they ſhan't.

OLDCASTLE.

Ay! ay! this will do her good. Come, come, dry up your tears,

MARY-

MARY-ANN. (ſobbing)

I did not do any thing to be devoured in the jaws of ruin, ſo I did not.

OLDCASTLE.

No, no; all will be well. 'Tis for your good I ſpeak. So, ſo, ſo; have done crying. There—— make me a curteſy. Mighty well! be a good girl.

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but they ſhan't murder, and devour me, for there are folks enough in London all hours of the day to aſſiſt a body; and if he comes in the night, I can call the watch, ſo I can.

OLDCASTLE.

I am pleaſed with her ſimplicity. This young profligate that you have let into my houſe, if he ſhould come under your window again—That's right. I have a thought: you ſhall fling him out all his preſents, you ſhall write him a letter, and tell him what a monſter he is. Come, take that chair, ſit down, take that pen, and write as I dictate to you.

MARY-ANN. (ſitting down.)

Law! I does not underſtand all this.

OLDCASTLE. (walking about)

Write as I dictate. Come, begin. Mr. Brumpton. (goes to the ſide of the ſcene) Peter, bring me up a candle.

MARY-ANN.

" Dear Mr. Brumpton!

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

Mr. Brumpton, and no more.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling aſide)

Very well.

OLDCASTLE. (walking about)

You are a vile man, and your viſits I now ſee ſprung from a bad deſign.

MARY-ANN. (aſide)

Ah! I don't like thoſe words. By goles (ſmiling as his back is turned) I know what I'll do—(ſtifling a laugh) I have writ it.

OLDCASTLE.

To ruin my future happineſs——

MARY-ANN.

Happineſs. (writes)

OLDCASTLE.

Your intention is baſe, and unworthy of a gentleman.

MARY-ANN.

Very well. (writes)

OLDCASTLE.

You are odious in your perſon; deteſtable in your morals, and the ſcorn of all our ſex. Have you writ it?

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

Stay, ſtay, all our ſex. (writes)

OLDCASTLE.

I am in love with Mr. Biddulph.

MARY-ANN.

Who?

OLDCASTLE.

Write as I bid you. I am in love with Mr. Biddulph, a worthy good gentleman; and out of his hands, it never ſhall be in your power to ſeduce me.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling)

Very well.

OLDCASTLE.

Therefore let me never ſee you any more—Mary Ann Richley.

MARY-ANN. (writes)

Mary Ann Richley.

OLDCASTLE.

Now let me read it.

MARY-ANN.

No, no; ſtay, ſtay a moment: not quite done.

Enter

Enter PETER. (with a candle)

PETER.

Here be the candle, maſter. The gentleman is walking under the window now.

OLDCASTLE.

Is he? Make haſte, fold up the letter; let me do it; let me do it. Make haſte; come, come, diſpatch, he'll be gone, elſe. You ſhall throw it to him now, and all his preſents. Come, come, make haſte.

MARY-ANN.

Ah! I am ready. I like this of all things.

[Exeunt in a violent hurry.

Scene the Street.

Enter BELFORD, and LOVIBOND.

LOVIBOND.

Once more well met, Sir. You can write I fancy, can't you?

BELFORD.

The drift of that queſtion, Sir?

LOVIBOND.

I fancy you know this little bauble. (ſhewing a box) You don't know it to be ſure, no, nor the letter in the inſide. Here take it back. I charge nothing thing for the poſtage. You have it unopened, in ſtatu quo. (opens the box) Look ye here; ha!—you have it in good order, and well conditioned as it came. Ha! ha!——Harriet would not read a word of it: ſhe had no curioſity about it.

BELFORD.

But I have. (aſide, and taking the letter, opens it) Heavens bleſs her wit. (aſide, and reads)

LOVIBOND.

Ay! you know the hand-writing. Take notice you broke the ſeal yourſelf. None of us read a word of it. We return it unopened, to make the affront the deeper.

BELFORD.

I believe you, Sir. I ſee you never read a word of it.

LOVIBOND.

Not a ſyllable: her pride would not ſuffer it.

BELFORD.

Well, ſince it is come to this, being out of humour will avail nothing—Ha! ha! I can't help laughing.

LOVIBOND.

That's pleaſant of you. Ha! ha! ha!

BELFORD.

Yes, very pleaſant. Ha! ha! ha!

Lo-

LOVIBOND.

See what your intrigues are come to!

BELFORD.

Yes, Sir, you have brought 'em to a fine paſs.

LOVIBOND.

Ay! you ſee I am not to be tricked.

Enter OLDCASTLE.

OLDCASTLE.

Mr. Lovibond, I am wild with joy.

LOVIBOND.

And ſo am I.

BELFORD.

Who is that old fellow? (aſide, and reads his letter)

OLDCASTLE.

I have managed matters charmingly. Who is that ſpark?

LOVIBOND.

You need not be ſhy of him. Mr. Old——

OLDCASTLE.

Call me Biddulph. (aſide)

LOVIBOND.

Well! I fancy you will toſs no more letters in at the window.

BELFORD.

No truly, Sir, not I: and I beg you will aſſure the lady that——

LOVIBOND.

Ay! let us hear: you need not mind this gentleman. Come, come, let us hear, now brother Old——

OLDCASTLE.

Call me Biddulph. (aſide).

LOVIBOND.

Ay! now hear him, Mr. Biddulph.

BELFORD.

I beg the lady's pardon, Sir. I reſign myſelf to her inclinations, and ſhall obey her commands.

LOVIBOND.

Very well.

BELFORD.

You are too powerful a rival, and ſince it is ſo, you will be pleaſed to tell her I moſt heartily approve of the choice ſhe has made.

LOVIBOND.

Do you hear that? (to OLDCASTLE.)

BEL-

BELFORD.

Her ſuperior ſenſe ſhines forth in every action of her life, and, Sir, I have only to ſay that I ſhall never give her cauſe to complain again. You will report me to the lady, and, Sir, I take my leave. [Exit.

LOVIBOND.

There, there, you ſee what a happy man I am.

OLDCASTLE.

Well, and now let me tell you——

LOVIBOND.

I can't ſtay to hear: I am in the elements with joy. 'Brother Oldcaſtle, your ſervant. [Exit.

OLDCASTLE.

But, brother Lovibond, let me tell you—an envious man, he can't bear his neighbours happineſs. I muſt follow him and tell him all. [Exit.

Enter BRISK.

BRISK.

My dear good-nature hold you your tongue! you plead in vain: not a ſtep will I budge. I am rock, and will be made a dupe no more. Well ſaid my juſt reſentment: we know the world now, and will be led a devil's dance no longer. Bravo Briſk, now you are free, and your own man again. Service is a very unthankful office, and for the mere honour of ——Pſhaw! pox! now my honour muſt be heard.

What will the world ſay of you, Mr. Briſk, you that have hitherto been the firſt footman in England, renowned for your parts and your abilities! money is abſolutely neceſſary for your maſter's affairs: Mr. Oldcaſtle is his only reſource, and you have orders to apply for it directly. But, my dear honour, you know what an empty bubble you are, and how often I have been kicked in your ſervice. The more glory, man; If any body thinks it worth his while to kick you, it's a ſign you are riſing in the world. Thoſe are the things that will help your fortune, and make an exciſeman of you at laſt! bravo! I kindle at the thought. I muſt go on; one effort more, Briſk, and then——But how! how to touch the caſh!—"My Maſter is in the utmoſt diſtreſs, Sir, and will "be for ever obliged to you"——Pſhaw! that will never do—I have a ſtratagem, and if I can but meet with maſter Oldcaſtle——ha! as luck will have it—courage, Briſk! here he comes.

Enter OLDCASTLE.

BRISK.

Oh! Sir! I am glad I have met you at laſt. I have ſought you thro' the whole town.

OLDCASTLE.

You live with young Brumpton, don't you?

BRISK.

The ſame, Sir. Such a tide of affairs coming upon him! ſuch an unforeſeen accident! poor Sir Theodore, Sir! the good worthy gentleman, on his way from the country——

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

I underſtood he was in town.

BRISK.

He was coming to town, Sir; we expected him every hour. And now the fatal news is arrived. He was taken ſuddenly ill; no aſſiſtance near; it happened on the road; the poor gentleman expired, and in the moſt critical moment!

OLDCASTLE.

Carried off in this manner you ſay, and without having time to be ill!

BRISK.

Yes, Sir; without a ſingle conſultation of phyſicians! It's very hard! It's a pity he was in ſuch a haſte to die. But good ſometimes comes of evil they ſay. The news has wrought a wonderful change in my young maſter. Sir Theodore had made a match for him in the country; a great match indeed!

OLDCASTLE.

Ay! I heard of it.

BRISK.

And yet the ſon, perverſe and obſtinate, was in love here in town; that is, he fancied he was, with an inſignificant huſſey, and was determined to marry her, in oppoſition to his poor father.

OLDCASTLE.

I have heard of that too.

BRISK.

But he is now ſhocked to find that he has been a monſter of diſobedience, and he gives up all thought of this town lady.

OLDCASTLE.

That's right: the good young man!

BRISK.

He renounces her for ever, Sir, and is reſolved to go off immediately for the country, and marry no woman in the world but the perſon deſigned for him by his father.

OLDCASTLE.

The good young man! this is the beſt news I ever heard in my life. (aſide) The good young man!

BRISK.

But then his intention of going out of town, I fear, may be fruſtrated.

OLDCASTLE.

As how! that muſt not be.

BRISK.

Why we were kept a little bare of caſh latterly, juſt to reduce him to a ſenſe of his duty: and now he wants wherewithal to diſcharge ſome little bills, before we ſet out for the country.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

Why, I am indebted to Sir Theodore's eſtate. The intentions of the young man muſt not be fruſtrated.

BRISK.

Heaven forbid!

OLDCASTLE.

Here, I have in a purſe here——Ha! ha! I ſhall get rid of a plague and a torment (aſide)——I can let him have a couple of hundreds——(holds out the purſe to him)

BRISK.

Ah! Sir! if you will be ſo generous.

OLDCASTLE.

Here, here; take it to him. and tell him he can't go out of town too ſoon.

BRISK.

I ſhall be ſure to tell him Sir. [Exit.

OLDCASTLE.

A good journey to him, ſay I. How! is not that he?

Enter BRUMPTON. (humming a tune)

OLDCASTLE.

Well, Mr. Brumpton—the young rogue, nothing affects him. Now will h e tell me that he is going back into the country.

BRUMPTON.

Oh!—I longed to ſee you. The old curmudgeon is returned from the country.

OLDCASTLE.

Ay! let us hear.

BRUMPTON.

The ſervants have changed their tone, and the door is ſhut in my face.

OLDCASTLE.

I can't help laughing. Ha! ha! this Mr. Biddulph knows what he is about, I fancy.

BRUMPTON.

Po! the fellow is fitter to have the funeral ſervice read over him than the marriage ceremony. He made her come to the balcony,---

OLDCASTLE.

Well! how was that?

BRUMPTON.

He muffled himſelf up behind the curtain: She threw me out ſome trinkets, I had given her. But, my dear friend, ſhe flung a letter with 'em.

OLDCASTLE.

I long to hear about that.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

The contents of it amazed me.

OLDCASTLE.

I dare ſay: ſhe told you her mind, I reckon.

BRUMPTON.

Moſt freely, moſt openly. Old Noſtrodamus is outwitted. For, look you here, here in her own fair hand—ten thouſand bleſſings on her (kiſſes the letter) Here, Sir, the genuine dictates of her heart.

OLDCASTLE.

He is mad, ſure! let me hear it.

BRUMPTON. (reads)

" Dear Mr. Brumpton, you are a charming man,
" and your civilities, I am ſure, ſprung from an ho-
" neſt deſign, for my future happineſs.

OLDCASTLE.

In the name of wonder, what is all this! (aſide)

BRUMPTON. (reads)

" Your intentions are generous and worthy of a
" gentleman.

OLDCASTLE.

The little ſorcereſs! (aſide)

BRUMPTON. (reads)

" You are handſome in your perſon, and your
" manners alſo; and the admiration of all our ſex.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! the Jezebel! (aſide)

BRUMPTON. (reads)

" I hate Mr. Biddulph, an odious old wretch; " and——

OLDCASTLE.

The vile harlotry! (aſide)

BRUMPTON. (reads)

" And out of my guardian's hands, it is in your " power to relieve me. Yours indeed, and indeed, " until death us do part—Mary Ann Richley."

OLDCASTLE.

She has reverſed every word of it!

BRUMPTON.

There's an adventure! ha! ha! ha;——Is not ſhe a charming girl? You don't partake of my joy.

OLDCASTLE.

Partake of your joy—I—I—I—yes. [looking un-eaſy

BRUMPTON.

What a way old Biddulph will be in!

OLDCASTLE.

Why, I muſt ſay I feel for him.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

Feel for him, a baſe betrayer of his truſt! who could offer his withered, ſuperannuated love to the ſweeteſt girl, and with the winter of old age nip ſo much beauty in its bud! January and May joined together! does not that make you laugh?

OLDCASTLE.

I am afraid of laughing, tho' I love it of all things. It ſets me a coughing. Well! but trouble may come of all this.

BRUMPTON.

Never be uneaſy. An't you amazed at my ſucceſs?

OLDCASTLE.

I am indeed. I never was ſo confounded in all my days (aſide) I wiſh as heartily as a miniſter of ſtate that there was not ſuch a thing as pen, ink, and paper in the kingdom. (aſide)

BRUMPTON.

What's the matter with you?

OLDCASTLE.

A megrim has ſuddenly taken me. Take care what you do. I thought you were going into the country. I have let your man Briſk have two hundred for your uſe.

BRUMPTON.

Have you? Nobly done! that will help me to carry carry her off. You have furniſhed me with the ſinews of war.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! the vile baggage! I am undone; I am ruined. I muſt run home directly. [Exit.

BRUMPTON.

What's the matter with the old curmudgeon?

Enter BELFORD.

BRUMPTON.

Belford, let me embrace you. I tread in air. (embracing him.)

BELFORD.

My dear Brumpton, I too am wild with joy. I am out of my ſenſes—(walks about humming a tune)

BRUMPTON. (hums a different tune)

Oh! ſuch an unexpected, tranſporting, raviſhing event!

BELFORD.

Such a ſurprize, above all romance!

BRUMPTON.

Oh! Belford, I am the happieſt rogue.

BELFORD.

Such unutterable bliſs, my dear boy——

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

Her wit is equal so her beauty.

BELFORD.

The greateſt ſtroke of invention,—Ha! ha!

BRUMPTON.

Such a ſweet epiſtle!

BELFORD.

So divine a letter! and the old fellow brought it himſelf.

BRUMPTON.

No, no; you miſtake; ſhe flung it out of the window.

BELFORD.

Po!—I tell you he was the bearer of it himſelf.

BRUMPTON.

You are quite wrong; ſhe was in the balcony, and——

BELFORD.

Pſhaw! give me leave to know. Did not I ſee him?

BRUMPTON.

There was no ſeeing him diſtinctly. He was ſkulking behind the curtain, and then ſhe threw the letter letter down to me. The idol of my heart!—the lovely Mary Ann!

BELFORD.

Mary-Ann! 'ſdeath! I was telling you how my ſweet godeeſs contrived to ſend me a letter by her very guardian.

BRUMPTON.

I did not hear a ſyllable of that matter. I was telling you ——

BELFORD.

Then I'll tell you how it was.

BRUMPTON.

No—no—hear the ſtory of my happineſs.

BELFORD.

Nay, nay; mine is the moſt ſurprizing.

BRUMPTON.

Look ye here, my boy (ſhewing a letter) the work of her own fingers!

BELFORD.

There, there—(ſhewing his letter) more eloquence than in all Cicero.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON. (reads)

Dear Mr. Brumpton, you are a ſweet man, and your civilities——

BELFORD. (reads)

You will be ſurprized at this letter; and more ſo at the manner of conveying it.

BRUMPTON. (reads)

The admiration of all our ſex.

BELFORD. (reads)

But I muſt hazard all, or fall a ſacrifice to the avarice of my guardian.

BRUMPTON. (reads)

And out of his hands it is in your power to relieve me.

BELFORD. (reads)

I love you, Mr. Belford; will you deſpiſe me for telling you ſo? I hope not.

BRUMPTON. (reads)

Yours indeed, and indeed, until death us do part, Mary-Ann Richley.

BELFORD. (reads)

Contrive ſome means for my eſcape, and heaven and earth combined ſhall not keep you from me—the diſconſolate Harriet.

[Exeunt together.

(Each interrupting the other, and reading at the ſame time very eagerly.)

SCENE

SCENE OLDCASTLE'S Houſe.

Enter PETER and BRIDGET.

PETER.

It's pure lucky, Bridget, he did not find the gentleman in the cloſet.

BRIDGET.

He lay cloſe all the time like a mouſe in a cheeſe, and maſter walked about the room, and gnawed his lip, and gnaſhed his teeth, and gave the table a hugeous rap with his ſtick, and fetched a deep groan, and did not ſay ſo much as one word, and then led Miſs Mary-Ann out of the room.

PETER.

I'll tell you what, Bridget, it's all owing to his finding out the young gentleman's viſits here to Miſs Mary Ann.

BRIDGET.

Yes, yes; it ſtands to reaſon how it muſt be that. Dear me! he locks poor Miſs Mary-Ann up here for all the world like a horſe in a pound, and I can't tell why or by reaſon whereof, not I.

PETER.

I'll tell you, Bridget. I underſtands theſe matters. He locks her up do you ſee, becauſe as why he is troubled with jealouſy.

BRID-

BRIDGET.

What is jealouſy pray, Peter?

PETER.

Dear heart, you are ſuch another. Jealouſy, you may know, won't let a body ſleep. It's for all the world like ſo many rats behind the wainſcot. I'll tell you now, by way of likeneſs. The gentleman you know gaved you a guinea. Now putting caſe, any body was to come for to take away your guinea, do you ſee, that would put you in a paſſion, would not it?

BRIDGET.

Oh! I underſtands it now.

PETER.

It's as like it as any thing. For ſee but here: Miſs Mary-Ann is his guinea; and you know when a body wants to be fingering another man's money, what does he do then?—Why he brings you down to ſizes an whole heap of London counſel, to quarrel about it, and abuſe one another, and be together by the ears for ever ſo many hours.

BRIDGET.

I remember all that, and it's as like Miſs Mary-Ann as it can ſtare. But then I want to know why does not every body make the ſame fuſs, and lock his wife up too?

PETER.

Po! you fool! that's becauſe every body does not love his wife as well as a guinea.

BRID-

BRIDGET.

Then I underſtands the whole git of it. But law look ye there!

PETER.

It's maſter, as ſure as a gun. How he looks, Bridget! let us get out of his way. [Exeunt.

Enter OLDCASTLE.

OLDCASTLE.

What a trick ſhe has played me! Oh! the little treacherous——

Enter MARY-ANN.

MARY-ANN.

Law! you look ſo ſtrange, you are enough to frighten a body.

OLDCASTLE.

Mary-Ann, I have ſeen Mr. Brumpton.

MARY-ANN.

Have you? (laughs aſide)

OLDCASTLE.

He was wonderfully pleaſed with your letter.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling aſide)

By goles, I know why.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

What did you ſay to him?

MARY-ANN.

Say to him! (turns away, and ſmiles

OLDCASTLE.

Did you write what I bid you?

MARY-ANN. (laughing)

Altered it a little bit!

OLDCASTLE.

A good deal, I fancy.

MARY-ANN. (laughs)

By gingo, I played you that trick.

OLDCASTLE.

And was not it baſe to deceive me?

MARY-ANN.

I could not find it in my heart to ſay the things you wanted me to write.

OLDCASTLE.

And don't you conſider what a crime it is?

MARY-ANN.

It was only to play upon you.

OLDCASTLE.

Such a wicked letter, Mary Ann!

MARY-ANN.

It was you ſhewed me the way. How ſhould I have thought of ſuch a thing?

OLDCASTLE.

That ſtings, that galls—(aſide) But there are women, Mary Ann, who can write without being bid.

MARY-ANN.

What, all out of their own heads!

OLDCASTLE.

Even ſo.

MARY-ANN.

And what do they write?

OLDCASTLE.

They make aſſignations; inform their gallants, when their huſbands are to be from home; they fix the time for amorous meetings, at routs, and drums——

MARY-ANN.

Routs and drums! what be they?

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

Wicked aſſemblies!—where women loſe more than they can pay, and then pawn their perſons, together with the huſband's honour, and ſo infamouſly pay off the debts they have contracted.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling)

That's comical enough.

OLDCASTLE.

And then they fly wild about this town; to the ſeducing gaieties of Vaux-hall and Ranelagh.

MARY-ANN.

Law! I never heard of they.

OLDCASTLE.

Ranelagh, child, is a wicked round of ſin, intrigue, and clandeſtine love; where crowds gather together, ſtealing glances, exchanging letters, negotiating riotous pleaſures. Vaux-hall is a very Paradiſe of forbidden fruits, where ſhady walks exclude the conſcious day, and every blandiſhment of ſenſe, muſick, wine, and opportunity, conſpire to waken the voluptuous paſſions.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling)

And muſt not Mary-Ann ſee thoſe places?

OLDCASTLE.

No, never, never, Mary Ann. Here, here is the marriage-act for you to read. All young girls ought to have it by heart. This will teach you how unnatural it is to fall in love without the conſent of King, Lords, and Commons!

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but I can't ſtay for their leave. They are too great folks for me to think of!

OLDCASTLE.

Take it up-ſtairs with you. It is a very edifying tract!

MARY-ANN.

Very well, I'll go—(as ſhe is going) I'll go and try if I can't write a letter out of my own head.

[Exit.

OLDCASTLE.

When ſhe has read the marriage act, ſhe will have a proper ſenſe of her duty. So, Peter!—ſo, Bridget!——walk in.

Enter PETER and BRIDGET.

OLDCASTLE.

Now if I can tutor theſe to my mind. (aſide)

BRIDGET.

For the love of mercy, Sir.

PETER.

I'll never do ſo any more, maſter.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

Come hither both. I am not angry: you are no ſtrangers to the affection I bear Mary-Ann.

BRIDGET.

No, that's for ſure: you love her as well as you do a guinea.

OLDCASTLE.

How now, Malapert!

BRIDGET.

I am ſure Peter ſaid ſo.

PETER.

No, not I, for the varſal world!

OLDCASTLE.

What's the matter, Numſkulls? Liſten to me. Watch my houſe well; and be ſure you never let any powdered coxcombs put a foot over the threſhold of my door.

BRIDGET.

Yes, Sir!

PETER.

No, Sir!

OLDCASTLE.

But the wily arts of young men! Think of a gay embroidered fop coming to you with a piteous look: "I languiſh for your miſtreſs; I die in her abſence; let me but ſee her, or elſe I have one foot in my grave already."

PETER.

Be gone about your buſineſs, fellow, ſays I. This is no place for you. My young miſtreſs deſires no ſuch trumpery.

OLDCASTLE.

Mighty well, Peter, it can't be better. But you, Mrs. Bridget, will take ſome compaſſion upon a poor dying ſwain.

BRIDGET.

Go farther a field, and ſet up the ſign of the Horns ſomewhere elſe, do: no admittance for you here.

OLDCASTLE.

Charming, Bridget, charming! you do it wonderfully. But then, ſays he "I'll lie down in the ſtreet, and there breathe my laſt.

PETER.

And then I run up to the garret-window, and ſouce a bucket of water on his head.

OLDCASTLE.

Excellent! excellent! it will cool his paſſion for him. Have a bucket of water always ready. Ha! ha! I ſhould laugh to ſee him ſtreaming like a river-god in the ſtreet. I am delighted with you both. But then he comes with his damned bewitching gold. Here, Peter, to drink my health: here Mrs. Bridget, to buy you ſome tea.

PETER.

PETER.

We want none of your droſs.

BRIDGET.

No, not we. (puſhing Oldcaſtle)

PETER.

Go about your buſineſs, I ſay.

BRIDGET.

Money is the root of all evil. Both ſhoving him.

OLDCASTLE.

As I could wiſh. That's right; never ſpare me. But here, ſays he, here's the money for you. [holding out money.

PETER.

I humbly thank your honour. (takes it.)

OLDCASTLE.

Villain! traitor! (ſtrikes him) Is this your virtue at laſt?

PETER.

Law! what's the matter? Was not I to take it?

OLDCASTLE.

What have I been labouring all this time?

PETER.

But you did not ſhew the money at firſt. I could have refuſed it ever ſo long, if I had not ſeen the colour of it.

OLDCASTLE.

The way of the world! but you are never to take it. Money is the ruin of the world. It declares war, it patches up a peace, it makes lawyers ſpeak, it makes ſome folks hold their tongues. Go, and think of all this.

BRIDGET and PETER. (going in an hurry) Yes, Sir!

OLDCASTLE.

And remember you have no buſineſs with money, ——Come, and ſhut the ſtreet-door after me.

BOTH.

Yes, Sir.

OLDCASTLE.

Be ſure you never touch a ſhilling. This Mr. Brumpton will be the death of me. [Exeunt.

End of the SECOND ACT.

ACT

ACT the THIRD.

SCENE the Street.

Enter OLDCASTLE and LOVIBOND.

OLDCASTLE.

BROTHER Lovibond! I go on as I could wiſh: my family is all as exact as clock-work.

LOVIBOND.

I am glad of it, for the laſt time I met you——

OLDCASTLE.

Ay, there was ſomething amiſs; but now, I am completely happy.

Enter BRUMPTON.

BRUMPTON.

My dear old friend, I am glad I have met you. Oh! ſuch plague! ſuch vexation!

OLDCASTLE.

Mind him, brother Lovibond: you'll ſee what order my family is in. (aſide)

BRUMPTON.

I was at the houſe but a little while ſince, and—

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

And no admittance?

BRUMPTON.

Oh! the vileſt adventure!

OLDCASTLE.

A bucket of water upon your head, I reckon?

BRUMPTON.

Not ſo bad as that. I got over the garden wall, and——the adventure is whimſical too——the ſervants immediately conducted me up ſtairs.

OLDCASTLE.

Conducted you up ſtairs!

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha!——mind him, brother Biddul——

OLDCASTLE. (aſide to Lovibond)

Call me Oldcaſtle.

BRUMPTON.

But, pox take it! my uſual good fortune failed me. I was not in the room two minutes when old Stiff-rump came tottering up: no way for a retreat. I was obliged to ſkulk in a dark nook, where I was almoſt ſtifled. In he came, and the lovely angel immediately accoſted him in ſuch a tone of ſimplicity!

LOVIBOND.

Simplicity! ay, ay; let us hear.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

The curmudgeon did not utter a ſyllable: he walked about the room, fetched a deep groan, banged the table with his cane, took her by the arm, and led her away with him.

LOVIBOND.

A narrow eſcape, brother Biddulph.

OLDCASTLE.

Call me Oldcaſtle, I ſay. (aſide)

LOVIBOND.

Simplicity is an admirable preſervative of young girls. Well, young gentleman, and how did all this end?

BRUMPTON.

His back was no ſooner turned, than I ſtole down ſtairs, tipt the ſervant a couple of guineas, and ſo got clear off.

LOVIBOND.

The old gentleman is going on delightfully. His family is all like clock-work! Brother Biddulph, your's. [Exit.

BRUMPTON.

Biddulph! what are you Mr. Biddulph all this time?

OLDCASTLE.

You ſee what plague and vexation you was bringing upon your old friend.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

My dear Sir, why did not you tell me at firſt? If I had known that I was all this time treſpaſſing upon your ground——

OLDCASTLE.

You ſee what a ſcene of iniquity you have been engaged in! But ſince you perceive your error, I am pacified. I'll tell you; you ſhall come and explain your miſtake to Mary-Ann this moment.

BRUMPTON.

With the utmoſt pleaſure, Sir, and wiſhing her all happineſs, I will bid her farewell for ever.

OLDCASTLE.

That will be right. You ſhall tell her that you repent, that you now renounce all wicked projects, and are convinced it would be the ruin of her to marry you.

BRUMPTON.

Lead the way, Sir; I am ready to obey your commands.

OLDCASTLE.

Very well! enough ſaid. (going)

BRUMPTON.

One dear interview!—Bravo! Brumpton! you're in luck. (aſide)

OLDCASTLE. (turning about)

What do you ſay?

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

Only that I am glad of this diſcovery.

OLDCASTLE.

Very well; come along. [Exeunt.

SCENE the Houſe.

Enter MARY-ANN.

MARY-ANN.

By goles this is pure. I ſaw him at the window: he is bringing him to ſee me. I have writ another letter ſince he has taught me that trick himſelf; and now I'll give it him if I can.

Enter OLDCASTLE and BRUMPTON.

OLDCASTLE.

Mary-Ann, I have brought the gentleman with me. He comes to aſk your pardon, and to tell you that he was going to be the ruin of you. Tell it to her yourſelf, Mr. Brumpton.

MARY-ANN.

I am ſure I forgive him with all my heart, ſo I do.

OLDCASTLE.

Speak to her, Mr. Brumpton, ſpeak to her.

BRUMPTON.

Madam, I did not know what liberties I was taking with my friend.

OLD-

OLDCASTLE.

You had a mind to ruin her, ſay ſo without mincing it.

BRUMPTON.

I muſt now renounce all farther pretenſions; ſince to adore you any longer would be a violation of friendſhip, and an injury to this worthy gentleman, who has been an intimate with my father for fifty years.

OLDCASTLE.

You may paſs that by.

BRUMPTON.

So that I moſt humbly beg your pardon.

OLDCASTLE.

Go on, go on—(he is ſeized with a fit of coughing)

BRUMPTON. (while Oldcaſtle coughs)

And though I ſhall never efface your loved idea from my mind—(he kiſſes his hand to her)

MARY-ANN. (ſhe ſmiles)

You have my pardon: I told you ſo already.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! Lord! Lord! (recovering himſelf) Well, have you told her you have done with her for ever?

BRUMPTON.

Yes, I have got ſo far.

OLDCASTLE.

Very well! Now, Mary-Ann, on your part, let him know your mind.

MARY-ANN.

Muſt I ſay all out of my own head?

OLDCASTLE.

Ay! ay! tell him all. I wiſh brother Lovibond was witneſs to this! (aſide)

MARY-ANN.

I am very glad you came to ſpeak to me, Sir, and I underſtand you very well. (ſmiles to him)

OLDCASTLE.

But a little more at large: tell him whom you chuſe for an huſband.

MARY-ANN.

Why, here are two lovers, for whom I have very different ſentiments. I love one of them,---(frowning at Oldcaſtle) and (ſmiling at Brumpton) I hate the other. The company of one is always agreeable, (to Oldcaſtle ſullenly) and (ſmiling at Brumpton) I don't care if I never ſee the other's face. I ſhould like to be married to one of them, (to Oldcaſtle) and (ſmiling at Brumpton) I had as ſoon be gibbetted, as be married to the other. But my own Mr. Oldcaſtle ---(toys and plays with him, then turning to Brumpton) I love you of all things.

OLDCASTLE.

You have won my heart.

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

But do you forgive I every thing now? Ah! you don't love me. (ſings "Go, naughty man," and reaches a letter to Brumpton)

OLDCASTLE.

I do; in troth I do. Mr. Brumpton, you ſee I have not ſuggeſted a word: all the dictates of her own heart.

MARY-ANN. (ſmiling to Brumpton)

All from the very bottom of my heart!

BRUMPTON.

Since I underſtand you, Ma'am, I ſhall remove the hated object from your ſight.

MARY-ANN.

The ſooner the better.

(then turns and plays with Oldcaſtle)

BRUMPTON.

Mr. Oldcaſtle, I have the honour, Sir, to wiſh you all happineſs. I fly this moment to put your commands in execution, Ma'am. (going)

MARY-ANN.

You can't go about it too faſt.

BRUMPTON.

You may rely upon my honour.

MARY-

MARY-ANN.

And don't let me be unhappy any more.

BRUMPTON.

You may depend upon me.

OLDCASTLE.

So, ſo; now I'll attend you down ſtairs. Po! no ceremony. You have made me happy, Mr. Brumpton. You have made Mary-Ann happy. Come I'll let you out, Mr. Brumpton. [Exit.

BRUMPTON. (kiſſing his hand to Mary Ann) I attend you, Sir. [Exit.

MARY ANN.

By goles, he has taught me a little wit himſelf; and if Mr. Brumpton follows my directions, I ſhall be pure and happy at laſt.

SCENE LOVIBOND'S HOUSE.

Enter HARRIET and BELLFORD.

HARRIET.

I don't know what to ſay, Mr. Bellford; my heart begins to fail.

BELLFORD.

But after ſurmounting every difficulty, now in this laſt ſtage of the buſineſs to let your ſpirits ſink, would be ſuch a falling off from the character you have ſupported this day! a character that ſurpaſſes all the heroines in romance, both for ſpirit and contrivance.

HARRIET.

The difficulties I had to encounter rouzed my ſpirits for a while, juſt as fits give us for the time more than our natural ſtrength: but now the conflict's over, my reſolution ſtaggers, and I am at full leiſure to feel the weakneſs of my condition. I can't go through it, Mr. Bellford, I can't indeed.

BELFORD.

Nay, ſummon up your reſolution. Our mutual vows, the happineſs that waits us, every motive, a thouſand things conſpire, and call for all the conſtancy you are miſtreſs of.

HARRIET.

But then to break through all the proprieties of conduct; all the decencies which my ſex requires!

BELFORD.

In a caſe like your's, the means are juſt which ſave you from deſtruction.

HARRIET. (hears Lovibond coming)

Deliver me! what ſhall I do? Undone! detected!

BELFORD.

This is the conſequence of delaying too long.

HARRIET.

Run into this room; make haſte; diſpatch, (ſhuts him him in) and to make ſafe work—(puts the key in her pocket)

Enter LOVIBOND.

LOVIBOND.

Harriet, I am never happy but in your company. The minutes move with leaden feet, when I am not in your preſence.

HARRIET.

And yet, you ill-natured man! you can contrive to be out more than half the day.

LOVIBOND.

Chide me not; you'll break my heart if you do. every frown on that face is a death warrant, and every ſmile is benefit of clergy. Come, come, brighten up into happineſs and love.

HARRIET.

You know your power over me. You can do what you pleaſe with your own Harriet!

LOVIBOND.

Can I?

HARRIET.

Where have you been all this time?

LOVIBOND.

I have been——but you look pale; what is the matter?

HARRIET.

Occaſioned by fretting at your abſence. And that hideous man keeps me in a conſtant alarm.

LOVIBOND.

Don't waſte a thought on him. He will trouble you no more. Tho', to do him juſtice, I believe his intentions were honourable. Poor devil! ha! I fancy he loves you dearly. Well! but poor brother Oldcaſtle! your ſiſter has ſo bamboozled him.

HARRIET.

My ſiſter!

LOVIBOND.

She has admitted a young gentleman to viſit her.

HARRIET.

She could not be ſo wicked!

LOVIBOND.

The girl has not erred ſo much from an evil diſpoſition, as from ignorance. One Mr. Brumton—a wild, fiery young ſpark——he was in the very houſe with her, and ſhe hid him in the cloſet.

HARRIET.

In the cloſet! well! after that, I will never own her for my ſiſter! the wicked girl! I am glad I I have not viſited her.

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha! ha! poor man! he never ſuſpected any thing thing. Had it been my caſe, I ſhould have ſmoked it in a moment.

HARRIET.

Without doubt! there is no impoſing upon you.

LOVIBOND.

Oh! no, no ſuch thing: the eye of an eagle for a plot! But come; it begins to grow late. Come, let me hand you to your chamber, and then I'll lock you in ſafe from all harm till morning.

HARRIET.

Heavens! what ſhall I do now? (aſide) Huſh let me ſay a word to you firſt. Don't ſpeak loud. My ſiſter is indeed much worſe than you can conceive. I wiſh you would ſtep and bring Mr. Oldcaſtle hither directly.

LOVIBOND.

Now! what occaſion can there be———

HARRIET.

She loves that Mr. Brumpton to diſtraction, and has actually made her eſcape, to follow the vile man.

LOVIBOND.

Made her eſcape!

HARRIET.

She is in that room now. I have locked her in. Such wicked ſchemes as ſhe has in her head! She has told me all, and intends to marry this Mr.

Brumpton: ſhe has found out that ſhe is of age, and ſays ſhe will be made a fool of no longer! there is a ſpirit for you!

LOVIBOND.

A ſpirit indeed!

HARRIET.

But I have ſecured her, to prevent the diſgrace.

LOVIBOND.

That was conſiderate of you. Let me go and talk to the young vixen.

HARRIET.

No, no; that will ſpoil all. I have pretended to connive at all this: but the moſt prudent ſtep,—I have learned all my prudence, you know, from you——

LOVIBOND.

An apt ſcholar you have been!

HARRIET.

You are very good: but there is no time to be loſt. I would have you bring Mr. Oldcaſtle here directly, that he may find her in the very fact.

LOVIBOND.

Very good! and then I ſhall be able to do the poor man a ſervice, and make a jeſt of him in to the bargain. Keep her ſafe; don't let her out; this will ſo torment him! ha! ha! [Exit.

HAR-

HARRIET.

I am glad my ſiſter has found a lover, and I hope ſhe'll marry him with all my heart. Is he gone? (liſtens at the door.) Ay! I hear him lock the ſtreet-door after him. And now I'll venture to unlock this door.

Enter BELFORD.

BELFORD.

Thou charming contriver!

HARRIET.

Oh! this new danger has given freſh vigour to my ſpirits.

BELFORD.

And now, my angel, we'll make ſure of our happineſs. Come, truſt yourſelf to my care.

HARRIET.

And yet——

BELFORD.

Nay,—no more doubts: Our paſſage to the next houſe is without difficulty, and then liberty is ours.

[Exeunt.

SCENE the Street.

Enter LOVIBOND.

LOVIBOND.

I never was better pleaſed in all my life. I burn with impatience to ſee him. Ha! ha! I ſhall never be able to walk faſt enough. Ha! ha! ha!

Enter OLDCASTLE.

LOVIBOND.

Well met! I wanted to ſee you.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! I am now the happieſt man on earth. My troubles with young Brumpton are all at an end, and Mary Ann is ſafe at home,

LOVIBOND.

Ay! as he thinks poor man! ha! ha! (aſide)

OLDCASTLE.

You may laugh, but I ſhall like to ſee your plan ſucceed as well. What a dupe you will prove at laſt!

LOVIBOND.

What a dupe you are now! the bird is flown, man; Mary Ann has eloped.

OLDCASTLE.

Ha! ha! ha! you make me laugh.

LOVIBOND.

How ſecure he is! ha! ha! he little dreams— I tell you ſhe is gone.

OLDCASTLE.

Allways abſurd! (going out)

LOVI-

LOVIBOND. (following him.)
You are ruined, I tell you.

OLDCASTLE.
Ha! ha!——do you think I don't know better?
[Exeunt.

Enter HARRIET and BELFORD.

BELFORD.
Don't alarm yourſelf, my angel: This is my houſe. [knocks at the door.

HARRIET.
Oh! I ſhall certainly faint.

Enter BRUMPTON.

BRUMPTON.
My dear Bellford!

HARRIET.
Heavens! what's the matter?

BRUMPTON.
Don't be frightened, Ma'am.

BELFORD.
No; this is a friend of mine. Well! Brumpton, the buſineſs!

BRUMPTON.
My deareſt Belford, this is the moſt critical moment

ment of my life. I have bribed the ſervants; carried her off; ſhe is mine; mine for ever. Will you give me a room in your houſe for this one night?

BELFORD.

Why this ceremony? you know you may command in my houſe.

Re-enter OLDCASTLE and LOVIBOND.

OLDCASTLE.

What noiſe is that?

LOVIBOND.

That's Brumpton, I know his voice.

HARRIET.

I am frightened to death.

BRUMPTON.

The door opens, walk in ma'am, walk in.

(Harriet goes in.)

OLDCASTLE.

Huſh! Let us hear him.

BRUMPTON.

I am wild with love, with rapture, and ſucceſs! I have carried her fairly off, in triumph, my dear boy! She was locked up in a cloſet, but I broke open the door.

BEL-

BELFORD.

I give you joy. But my own happineſs calls. Bring the lady as ſoon as you will. [Exit.

BRUMPTON.

A thouſand thanks, my dear Bellford. Victoria! the prize is mine. [Exit.

LOVIBOND.

Are you convinced now?

OLDCASTLE.

I am thunderſtruck. Robbery! Murder! I'll break open the door. Watchman, call a juſtice of peace. I'll alarm the world! (raps at the door) Robbery! ſhipwreck! deſtruction! ruin!

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha! he feels it now, and I am not ſorry for him.

OLDCASTLE.

I am mad, I ſhall go diſtracted; I ſhall end my days in Bedlam. (Enter a ſervant.) I would fain ſpeak a word here in the houſe.

SERVANT.

Sir, my maſter is ſomewhat buſy, and—

OLDCASTLE.

I am plundered. I muſt go in. Oh! villain! villain! (ruſhes in)

LOVI-

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha! Now will he ſee which can train up a young girl beſt. [Exit.

SCENE an Apartment in BELFORD'S Houſe.

Enter BELFORD.

BELFORD. (liſtens at the door)

Ay! I hear his voice. How could my booby let him in? But I have lodged her ſafe, and this ſword ſhall maintain poſſeſſion.

Enter OLDCASTLE and LOVIBOND.

OLDCASTLE.

Where is ſhe? Where is the unfortunate? Reſtore her directly, reſtore her to her two guardians. We come to demand her of you.

LOVIBOND.

Yes, we demand her, Sir.

BELFORD.

My houſe is my caſtle, gentlemen, and nobody muſt offer violence here.

OLDCASTLE.

I'll ſearch your houſe. I claim her, I demand her; and I will have her.

LOVIBOND.

We are her guardians, Sir, both her guardians.

BEL-

BELFORD.

Mr. Lovibond, you are her guardian; and what then, Sir? Both of ye ſcandalous betrayers of your truſt! I know it all; each circumſtance. You would impoſe upon her tender years, that you may infamouſly plunder that property which was confided to your care!

LOVIBOND.

There is a cloud gathering!——We ſhall both be brought to a ſtrict account. I had better make up this matter, that I may enjoy my own Harriet in ſecurity. Better make the beſt of a bad bargain. (aſide) But let me underſtand you, Mr. Bellford: do you intend to marry her yourſelf?

BELFORD.

It is my peremptory reſolution. Marriage articles, for the purpoſe of ſettling her whole fortune upon herſelf, are now drawing in the next room.

LOVIBOND.

I ſee what courſe I muſt take. If he marries her, I ſhall live in peace (aſide)—Mr. Oldcaſtle, the girl is of full age. Let me ſay a word in your ear. (aſide to him)—Conſent to the marriage, and get a handſome allowance for the trouble and expence of her education: that word makes me laugh—ha! ha! ha!

OLDCASTLE.

I am diſtracted; what ſhall I do? (aſide)——I thought young Brumpton was to marry her?

BEL-

BELFORD.

No Brumpton on earth ſhall rob me of her!

LOVIBOND.

Think no more of her: ſhe is not worthy of your regard. Mr. Bellford will behave like a gentleman in matters of acount, and——

BELFORD.

Preſcribe your terms. I am ready to agree the matter this moment.

OLDCASTLE.

A releaſe for the intereſt of rents and profits, a cool five thouſand for extraordinary trouble.

BELFORD.

Agreed!

LOVIBOND.

Cloſe with him; cloſe with him directly.

BELFORD.

My lawyer is in the next room; let him draw up a memorandum between us, and your conditions are granted.

LOVIBOND.

It ſhall be done. We will both ſign: come, don't heſitate. [to Oldcaſtle.

OLDCASTLE.

I ſhall break my heart!

LOVI-

LOVIBOND.

Po!—no hesitating. Come and finish the business!

OLDCASTLE.

It is a terrible stroke!

LOVIBOND.

Never stand debating. You have made the best of a bad bargain: lose no time. [Forcing him along.

OLDCASTLE.

But, Mr. Bellford——

LOVIBOND.

We must resign her. We must give her up. Come along, man. [Forces him out.

BELFORD.

I attend you, gentlemen. I agree to your proposals.

Enter BRUMPTON and MARY-ANN.

BRUMPTON.

This way, my angel: we are safe here.

BELFORD.

Brumpton! I give you joy: I give you joy, Ma'am.

MARY-ANN.

I thank you kindly, Sir.

BRUMP-

BRUMPTON.

And now, Bellford, through the perils of this day——

BELFORD.

Hold, hold! they are not quite over. Here is a deed to be ſigned: when that is finiſhed, my happineſs is then complete. Excuſe me for a moment. [Exit.

BRUMPTON.

Succeſs attend you. Well, Briſk!

Enter BRISK.

BRISK.

I have got every thing clear off, Sir.

BRUMPTON.

I ſhall reward your ſervice: ſtay here and take care of this lady, while I diſpatch an affair, that admits of no delay. [Exit.

MARY-ANN.

Law! what a pretty room here is!

BRISK.

Your appearance tells me, that my maſter has found a treaſure.

MARY-ANN.

I am ſure I am fortunate in finding him; for I lead ſuch a life; you can't think how diſmal!

BRISK.

BRISK.

The ſcene will now be changed, and the pleaſures of life will court you on every ſide.

Enter OLDCASTLE. (liſtening)

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! the little compound of treachery and fraud!

MARY-ANN.

I was kept from morning to night mewed up at home, and he talked ſuch a parcel of bugbears to frighten a body!

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! the traitreſs!

MARY-ANN.

And he ſaid if I looked at a ſweet ſmiling young gentleman, that I ſhould be murdered, and devoured and ſwallowed up.

BRISK.

An old blockhead!

MARY-ANN.

Yes, I thought as much. But I am ſure I am obliged to Peter and Bridget for letting me out, and they ſhall come and live with me, ſo they ſhall. Do you know our Peter and Bridget?

OLDCASTLE.

They ſhall both be hanged, [aſide.

MARY-ANN.

And my old guardian wanted to marry me himſelf, but—(laughs) He talked in ſuch a manner, and ſaid ſuch ſtrange things! (laughs) The joke was, he taught me how to write letters, and I ſhould never have thought of ſuch a thing, had he not put me in the head on't. And he is ſo old, and totters about ſo; and he calls me his lambkin; and bids me read the marriage act, and a heap of nunſery. An hideous, ugly, old ſcare crow! La! there he is.

OLDCASTLE. (coming forward)

Thou ſerpent, whom I have warmed and cherriſhed in my boſom! you muſt ſting your benefactor at laſt, muſt you? Did not I promiſe to marry you?

MARY-ANN.

Yes, but, by goles, I thank you for that though.

OLDCASTLE.

Sirrah! villain! get you out of the room. (Exit Briſk) And will you deſert me for a ſtranger?

MARY-ANN. (ſhe laughs)

He's a ſweet man!

OLDCASTLE.

Viper! this is your ſimplicity, is it? I, who loved you ſo.

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but his love is more agreeable by half.

Enter

Enter LOVIBOND and BELLFORD.

LOVIBOND.

Well! now every thing is ſettled. The deeds are ſigned. So, madam, you are here, are you? Brother Oldcaſtle, I always told you how this would end. Ha! ha! ha!

OLDCASTLE.

If ſhe had minded my inſtructions—

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha! Inſtructions! You brought it all upon yourſelf. But 'tis better as it is: your head would have ached all the reſt of your days. Ha! ha! ha! I am heartily glad of this. Ha! ha! come, Mr. Bellford, I'll give her away. Here, take your wife.

OLDCASTLE.

Wounds! I can't ſtand this. I'll not be a witneſs. [goes out.

LOVIBOND.

But you ſhall be a witneſs. You are a party concerned. You muſt come back. [Exit after him.

BELLFORD.

Since they have agreed the matter, Harriet ſhall make her appearance. [Exit.

MARY-ANN. (alone)

What does all this mean! Sure it can't be ſiſter Harriet he talks of.

LOVIBOND. (without)
You muſt, you ſhall come back.

Enter BELLFORD, leading in HARRIET.

BELLFORD.
Don't be frightened. You are the object of my heart, and they will give you away.

LOVIBOND.
(forcing in Oldcaſtle, without looking behind him)
You are a party to the agreement: you must give her given away.

BELLFORD.
Here's the lady. (leading her to Lovibond.)

LOVIBOND.
Ay! ay! give me her hand. (without ſeeing her) you ſhall ſee the buſineſs done, Mr. Oldcaſtle. Here, here; wounds! what is all this? Harriet!

OLDCASTLE.
Huzza! a reprieve!

MARY-ANN.
Ah! ſiſter there? What have you been writing letters too! (goes up to her) I be glad to ſee you.

LOVIBOND.
What does all this mean? What brought you hither, Madam?

HAR-

HARRIET.

My love for this gentleman. (She takes Belford by the hand)

OLDCASTLE.

Ha! ha! ha! ſhe is his wife all this time.

HARRIET.

I was not by any means worthy of you, Sir; and ſo I have transferred my affections where I think they will be placed to advantage.

LOVIBOND.

I am ready to ſink into the ground with amazement!

OLDCASTLE.

Loll, toll, loll! brother Lovibond! you brought it all upon yourſelf. Ha! ha! ha! I pity and laugh at you. This is the education you have given her. Ha! ha!

LOVIBOND.

I ſhall die upon the ſpot.

OLDCASTLE.

Ha! ha! I ſaw what it would all end in. (follows him about) She would have been too young a wife for you, man. Ha! ha! I am heartily glad of it. Here, here, I'll give her away. Here Mr. Belford, take your wife.

BELFORD.

I accept her at your hands.

HARRIET.

And I give you mine, with all my heart!

OLDCASTLE.

Now, who underſtands education? Come, Madam, come you home with me. (taking hold of Mary Ann.)

MARY-ANN.

Ah! but I can't do that, for I be married as well as you, ſiſter. (runs over to her.) He carried me to a parſon, and it was for all the world, like what you uſed to ſay (to Oldcaſtle) about love, honour, and obey.

OLDCASTLE.

What do I hear?

Enter BRUMPTON.

BRUMPTON.

Oh! ho! ho! what a day of adventures have I had!

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! Mr. Brumpton! what a life you have led me!

BRUMPTON.

Yet you muſt excuſe me, Sir, when you recollect the letter the lady flung me out of the window.

Lo-

LOVIBOND.

Flung him a letter! ha! ha!

BRUMPTON.

And when you reflect, that you yourself brought me into her presence to receive this letter, in which she prays me to be her deliverer!

LOVIBOND.

Ha! ha! the contriver of his own misfortunes! Gave her the opportunity himself!

BELFORD.

And when you consider, Mr. Lovibond, that you brought me Harriet's messages, and delivered me this letter with your own hand!

LOVIBOND.

How is this!

HARRIET.

A declaration of my heart: I had nobody to carry it but you.

OLDCASTLE.

The contriver of his own ruin! delivered her a letter himself! ha! ha! how well he knows the world!

BRUMPTON.

Belford, give me your hand. We have been struggling hard for two sisters, and fortune has crown'd our endeavours with success.

OLDCASTLE.

Oh! Mary-Ann! you have deceived me, but I ſhall be glad to ſee you happy.

MARY-ANN.

And I am ſure, I ſhall be alway glad to ſee you, if you live theſe three years to come. Siſter Harriet, la! I longed like any thing to ſee you. I am glad we are both happy at laſt.

BRUMPTON.

A right uſe made of this event, will be of general ſervice to us all. To theſe gentlemen it may prove a School for Guardians, where they will learn not to bring upon themſelves the reproach of a diſhoneſt, an amorous, and contemptible old age. As to us, Belford, and theſe ladies, who are now embarked on a voyage for life, we cannot fail of happineſs.

To youth ſure rapture marriage ever brings,
When from eſteem the happy union ſprings,

FINIS.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by Miſs ELLIOT.

LADIES, your ſervant—Servant, gentlemen all!
The ſame good folks to you, both great and ſmall.
Here's MARY-ANN again:—but that an't fair!
To jeer a ſimple girl you might forbear.
Who knows, ſince married, tho' you laugh and gaze,
But MARY-ANN may learn your London ways?
May ape your faſhions, ſince you've ſhewn her how,
And drop the maſk at once, as I do now.

Thus you behold, whatever the condition,
To new extremes how eaſy the tranſition.
'Tis ſo thro' life: to town from country fairs
The clown comes up, and gapes, and laughs, and ſtares!
Give him a liv'ry—whims unknown before!
He learns his maſter's follies to do o'er;
He drinks, turns coxcomb, and betts five to four.
Pray, may I, ladies, touch your modiſh life,
And ſhew good ſenſe and faſhion there at ſtrife?
"Oh! do, Miſs Elliot, ſays a prude with ſpite,
Pull 'em to pieces; bring their faults to light;
Pulling to pieces is my dear delight."
Why then each fair one ſeems a diff'rent creature
From what ſhe's meant, and traveſties her nature.

Proud of defects, FLIRTILLA ſwims along,
Politely weak, and elegantly wrong.

Through

Through the gay round of time her only care
To fix the patch, and guide a ſtraggling hair.

Lady CAMILLA, form'd to ſeize the rein,
To rival John, and ſmack along the plain;
In London ſickens with diſſembled airs,
And "help me, help me up theſe odious ſtairs."

Nature's beſt gifts we all with pride diſclaim;
We liſp, we totter, deaf, and blind, and lame.
The tongue indeed we women n'er confine;
Scandal's too dear a pleaſure to reſign.
Scandal, and cards, tea, mirth, and ſpleen, a ball,
Comus! the monkey too! and there's the life of all.
A life of whim! till from the faded eye,
And wither'd form the trembling graces fly.

There's a true picture!—how do ye like it, ladies?
How is the light? And how do you think the ſhade is?
A copy hence our ſimple girl may make;
Unleſs ſhe ſhould this wiſer counſel take,
Be rul'd by reaſon for your beauty's ſake.
Reaſon ſtill gives to radiant eyes their grace,
Warren's imperial milk for ev'ry face!
Beauty, ye fair, may forge the lover's chain;
But the mind's charms your empire muſt maintain.

THE CHOICE,

A

COMEDY.

THE CHOICE,

A

COMEDY,

IN TWO ACTS.

Performed at the

THEATRE ROYAL

IN

DRURY-LANE.

Ut Nemo in ſeſe tentat deſcendere! Nemo!
Sed præcedenti ſpectatur Mantica Tergo.

PERSIUS.

Familiare eſt Hominibus omnia ſibi ignoſcere,
Nihil aliis remittere.

VELL. PAT.

Dramatis Perſonæ.

MEN.

WOODVIL,	Mr. PACKER
Sir WILLIAM LOVEWORTH,	Mr. YATES.
LOVEWORTH, his Son,	Mr. PALMER

WOMEN.

Mrs. WOODVIL,
CLARISSA,	Mrs. YATES.
WATCHIT,	Miſs BRADSHAW.

THE CHOICE.

ACT the FIRST.

Enter WOODVIL and LOVEWORTH.

WOODVIL.

YOU ſurpriſe me, Mr. Loveworth: a perſon of your taſte exchange the pleaſures of a town-life, for rooks and country ſquires at this dead ſeaſon of the year! There is ſome myſtery in all this.

LOVEWORTH.

My dear Mr. Woodvil, diſſipation has had its day; and now calm reflection and the ſentiments of the heart outweigh all the pleaſures of the vain and giddy.

WOODVIL.

So! grown a moraliſt!—Well, be the cauſe what it may, I am glad to ſee you at FAIRFIELD.—And yet all this hurry, and a young lady with you!—My wife's curioſity will be at work, if ſhe finds her in the next room. Who is the lady?

LOVE-

LOVEWORTH.

Mr. Woodvil, the happineſs of my life is now at ſtake. Her beauty, her merit, her accompliſhments juſtify my choice.

WOODVIL.

Married?

LOVEWORTH.

Theſe ten days.

WOODVIL.

With your father's conſent?

LOVEWORTH.

No, there's the rub: his conſent nothing can obtain.

WOODVIL.

This may prove a ſerious buſineſs: the violence of Sir William's temper——

LOVEWORTH.

Yes; he ſtorms and raves at his uſual rate; and if your interpoſition cannot moderate his rage, I am ruined.

WOODVIL.

Has he ſeen the lady?

LOVEWORTH.

No; he poſitively refuſes; ſwears he will never acknowacknowledge her; is determined to marry again; and I am to be diſinherited. In that reſolution I left him in town, and you are now troubled with this viſit.

WOODVIL.

If I can be of uſe to you, I ſhall think nothing a trouble. But your father, I fancy, lay at Grove-Place laſt night.

LOVEWORTH.

At Grove-Place! then muſt I fly the country.

WOODVIL.

No occaſion for that: do nothing in a hurry. Suppoſe I go over to him?—What is his objection to the match?

LOVEWORTH.

His objection, according to the way of the world, is neither more nor leſs than——

Enter WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Sir William Loveworth ſends his compliments, Sir. He reached Grove-Place laſt night, and if you are not engaged, he will wait upon you to dinner.

WOODVIL.

That's unlucky: I can't ſee him to day. Tell Sir William that——

LOVEWORTH.

You had better ſee him: let me be no hindrance, I can diſpoſe of myſelf out of his way.

WOODVIL.

It ſhall be ſo: a thought has juſt occurred to me. Where is the ſervant?

WATCHIT.

In the Hall, Sir.

WOODVIL.

Very well: Mr. Loveworth, excuſe me for a moment. [Exit.

LOVEWORTH.

Mrs. Watchit, you remember your promiſe. Secrecy is the word.

WATCHIT.

You may depend upon me, Sir.

LOVEWORTH.

My father's ſervant does not know that I am in the country, I hope.

WATCHIT.

Not a ſyllable: do you take me for a mar-plot?

LOVEWORTH.

You miſtake me; I know your prudence. I muſt not be ſeen by my father.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

By no means: I know Sir William, and ſo does the whole country round. He will be like a whirlwind, the moment he enters the houſe; and yet what he ſhould ſtorm at, I can't tell. You have married a ſweet young lady, that I can ſee already: ſhe is ſomebody, I'll warrant her; and what if ſhe has not a great fortune? Snap your fingers at fortune, Sir; ſhe is as good a ſort of a lady as a body would wiſh to know.

LOVEWORTH.

She is obliged to you, Mrs. Watchit. Keep our ſecret, and it may be in my power ſome time or other to——

Enter WOODVIL.

WOODVIL.

I have deſired to ſee Sir William. I have a ſcheme, which, ſhould it happen to ſucceed, may give a turn to your affairs. You muſt not be ſeen by him.—— Watchit, there is an apartment above ſtairs?

WATCHIT.

Yes, Sir, the alcove room.

WOODVIL.

There you may be concealed.

WATCHIT.

To be ſure, and his lady with him.

WOODVIL.

Hold you your tongue; that will not do.—Loveworth, your lady ſhall dine with Sir William.

LOVEWORTH.

Not for the world: expoſe her to a hurricane as ſoon.

WOODVIL.

Po! let me conduct this buſineſs. I can introduce her as a relation of mine: Sir William will then ſee her without prejudice, and who knows but—Say no more about it; I know it will do; truſt to me.

WATCHIT.

But your lady, Sir; won't her curioſity——

WOODVIL.

'Sdeath! I forgot that. Loveworth, my wife muſt not ſee you. Where is ſhe now, Watchit?

WATCHIT.

She walked out an hour ago: went acroſs the meadow towards the village: there is ſome ſcandal ſtirring there about farmer ASHFIELD's daughter; and ſhe is gone to make her enquiries.

WOODVIL.

Juſt as I could wiſh: Watchit, do you keep her from ſeeing my friend Loveworth, and his lady ſhall be a relation, whom my wife has never ſeen; my niece juſt come from Saliſbury. That will do.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

But how ſhall we keep my miſtreſs quiet, Sir? You know, if there is a ſecret going forward, ſhe will have a hundred eyes, all prying about.

WOODVIL.

Do you put her hundred eyes to ſleep: go now and learn where ſhe is, for fear of a ſurprize.

WATCHIT.

Here will be ſuch a piece of work. [Exit.

WOODVIL.

I had like to have forgot: you have not told me Sir William's objection.

LOVEWORTH.

The old objection, Sir: ſhe has no fortune; and this is not an age, in which merit without money is likely to meet with much favour.

WOODVIL.

That is among the few opinions, in which mankind have ſuffered no ſort of change.

LOVEWORTH.

Very true: ſyſtems of philoſophy have ſprung up in the world, varied, fluctuated, and given way to new devices: but he, who firſt ſaid that beauty, eloquence, wiſdom, and all ſufficient merit were included in money, was the father of a ſect, that ſpreads from the city-counter to the drawing room, and takes in at once the great vulgar and the ſmall.

WOODVIL.

And your father is ſo deep in his money-maxims, that reaſon will make a feeble ſtand againſt pounds, ſhillings, and pence.

LOVEWORTH.

And yet the amiable qualities of the perſon I have choſen—Huſh!—I was beginning a very unfaſhionable panegyrick, and luckily I am interrupted.

Enter CLARISSA.

WOODVIL.

My friend, Ma'am, has let me into the whole ſecret, and I give you joy.

CLARISSA.

You will find me a troubleſome gueſt, Sir.

WOODVIL.

When I have the honour of being better known to you, you will do me the juſtice to think that a viſit from Mrs. Loveworth will always make me happy.

CLARISSA.

The afflicted can make but very indifferent company, and my ſpirits are in ſuch an agitation——

Enter WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Sir William is arrived, Sir. He and my miſtreſs are now walking up the avenue.

CLA-

CLARISSA.

Sir William?—Heavens!—where ſhall I fly?

WOODVIL.

Don't be alarmed, Ma'am, he ſhan't ſurprize you: I'll ſtep and meet him. [Exit.

WATCHIT.

And I'll keep a look out for you: don't be frightened. [Exit.

CLARISSA.

I ſhall never be able to ſupport myſelf in his preſence. He conſiders me as a diſgrace to his family.

LOVEWORTH.

Diſgrace, Clariſſa! he will in time acknowledge you an honour to his family.

CLARISSA.

I cannot think of ſeeing him. I am the cauſe of all this diſtraction and uneaſineſs. Why would you make me marry without his conſent? When I think to what a degree I have incenſed him againſt you—Let me entreat you, Mr. Loveworth, to remove me from this houſe. Indeed I am terribly diſconcerted.

LOVEWORTH.

My love, I grant, were you to face him at once in the character of my wife, the ſhock would be too great. But Sir William does not know you. My friend Mr. Woodvil takes an intereſt in our mutual happineſs. He will introduce you as his relation, juſt come upon a viſit out of Wiltſhire. By degrees you may make an impreſſion upon my father, and win from him his conſent and approbation. The experiment is worth the trial. Conſider the conſequence it is of to me.—Why thoſe tears, my love?

CLARISSA.

Should he perſiſt in his reſolution to diſinherit you, I am the ſad occaſion of your ruin. (weeps)

LOVEWORTH.

You will be the occaſion of all that's dear to me in life. Dry up thoſe tears. We will depart this moment, if you chuſe it.

CLARISSA.

No; I have ſummoned up reſolution. I chuſe to ſtay. I have involved you in difficulties, and the leaſt I now can do, is to endeavour to extricate you. I feel new courage. I will ſee Sir William: I ſhall be able to go through it. But let me ſee, what character am I to aſſume? Oh! Mr. Woodvil's niece; and from where?

LOVEWORTH,

Juſt arrived from Saliſbury.

CLARISSA.

Very well; be it ſo. I'll undertake the part: it is a fair ſtratagem, and if I ſucceed in it——

Enter

Enter WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Sir, Sir; Madam, Madam; they are coming, and Mrs. Woodvil is ſo curious to ſee you! Fly, Mr. Loveworth; run up ſtairs, or you will be diſcovered.

LOVEWORTH.

'Sdeath! which way?

WATCHIT.

There; don't you ſee the ſtairs? Make haſte; diſpatch.

LOVEWORTH.

I am gone: the field is your own. [Exit.

CLARISSA.

How my heart flutters!

WATCHIT.

Courage, Madam; you can't fail of ſucceſs.

Enter WOODVIL.

WOODVIL. (looking back as he enters)

This way, Sir William: here is my niece. (to Clariſſa) Now call up all your reſolution.

CLARISSA. (to Watchit)

I ſhall certainly expire.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

You have nothing to fear: play this card well, and the game is yours.

WOODVIL.

Walk in, Sir William.

Enter Sir WILLIAM, and Mrs. WOODVIL.

Sir WILLIAM.

Ay, I ſhall be glad to ſee a relation of yours, Mr. Woodvil.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Where is ſhe? I am not acquainted with that branch of your family, my dear (to Woodvil) upon my word! (ſtands to look at Clariſſa) And is this your niece? Well! you may be proud of her. I never ſaw your poor ſiſter, Mr. Woodvil: ſhe has been dead theſe ten years I think. A fine figure truly! Is ſhe like her mother? Sir William, don't you admire her? What a complexion! and ſuch a ſweetneſs in her countenance. You are wellcome in theſe parts. I am free ſpoken, but when you and I are better acquainted, you will like me prodigiouſly, that I promiſe you.

CLARISSA.

That I dare ſay, Ma'am, but I cannot promiſe myſelf that I ſhall be ſo happy as to improve in your eſteem.

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

She is a ſweet girl: why did you conceal her from me all this time? It was very croſs of you, Mr. Woodvil.

WOODVIL.

Sir William, won't you ſalute my niece?

CLARISSA. (turning to Watchit)

I ſhall ſink into the earth.

Sir WILLIAM. (advancing)

She is rather baſhfull and ſhy.

WOODVIL.

That will wear off: you will find her elegantly accompliſhed. Clariſſa, my friend Sir William Loveworth.

Sir WILLIAM.

I am glad of this opportunity of paying my reſpects to ſo much beauty and ſo much apparent merit.

[Salutes her.

CLARISSA. (in confuſion)

Sir—I—you do me honour, Sir. (turns to Watchit) What ſhall I do?

WATCHIT.

Have a good heart, and the day is your own, Ma'am.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

You may be proud of her, Mr. Woodvil: ſhe is elegance itſelf.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

A perfect model! you never told me of her, my dear. (to Woodvil) And where have you hid yourſelf all this time? But you and I will have ſome talk by and by, and you ſhall tell me your whole hiſtory.

Sir WILLIAM.

Have you heard the hiſtory of my ſon, Mr. Woodvil? Do you know what the fellow has done?

WOODVIL.

Nothing that you may not overlook, I hope.

Sir WILLIAM.

Overlook! he has done what I ſhall never forgive: he has gone and married without my conſent, the blockhead! and thrown himſelf away for ever.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Well!—you ſurprize me: to whom? When? When? What ſort of a body? What's her name? What's her fortune?

Sir WILLIAM.

Fortune? Not a groat. A booby! a numſkull! a vile ungratefull profligate! the money I ſpent upon his education! yet you ſee what it ends in: could you think him capable of ſo raſh an action?

WOOD-

WOODVIL.

I always thought him guarded and prudent.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

And did not he conſult your will and pleaſure?

CLARISSA. (aſide to Watchit)

I wiſh you would lead me out of the room.

Sir WILLIAM.

Conſult my will and pleaſure?—Yes, after he had played the fool; after he had ruined himſelf.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Well, that was wrong indeed: I do think that was wrong. Mr. Woodvil, he ſhould have had his father's leave: don't you think he ſhould? I am ſure you do, and ſo does your niece here, for ſhe looks like a good girl. There is no defending your ſon, Sir William. I always thought him a promiſing young man, but after ſuch an evil ſtep, there is not a word to ſay for him: is there, Miſs?

CLARISSA.

It is not for me to accuſe the gentleman.

Sir WILLIAM.

No, Ma'am, no; you are too polite to interfere in family-matters; but you can ſay nothing in his favour. Marry a woman without a groat!

WOOD-

WOODVIL.

A love affair, I ſuppoſe.

Sir WILLIAM.

A bankrupt affair! he will be beggar'd by it. He muſt pleaſe his own fancy, truly! and he has done it. 'Sdeath! that a black-eye and a white ſkin ſhould rob a man of his ſenſes!

WOODVIL.

Well, well; ſhe may be a deſerving young lady, and her family may make the connection not turn out a bad one.

Sir WILLIAM.

Her family? Let her family maintain her; why is the burthen to be thrown on me? Her family has no objection; I will anſwer for 'em: but is that an excuſe? Mrs. Woodvil, I appeal to you, and to you, Ma'am, though your uncle puts in a good word for a graceleſs—Now do you think (to Clariſſa) young as you are, do you think any apology can be made for diſobedience to a father?

CLARISSA.

The queſtion is too difficult for me, Sir; I am not a proper judge.

Sir WILLIAM.

I will cut him off, with a ſhilling, that I can tell you: does not he know that I married a woman of fortune? That my father did the ſame? All my family from father to ſon have had the table of intereſt tereſt in view, and not one of us ever did a fooliſh thing out of generoſity. This booby of mine is the firſt of the name that ever did a diſintereſted thing.

Mrs. Woodvil.

There is a great deal in what you ſay, Sir William.

Woodvil.

Prithee don't you——

Mrs. Woodvil.

What do I do? I don't meddle. What I ſay is all between ourſelves: I ſpeak only by way of converſation. Fortune is always ſomething to be ſure: I think it was twenty thouſand I brought you, my love: no, not twenty; yes, firſt and laſt: ten down: five by the death of—Ay, very true: firſt and laſt full twenty thouſand: but then I had conſent of uncles and aunts, and couſins, and relations, and all the old folks.

Woodvil.

Po! ſtuff! how you run on!

Mrs. Woodvil.

Nay, don't ſnub a body; you was welcome, my love; had it been double, you ſhould have had it all; that is with conſent of prudent people; nothing of the ſort ſhould be without conſent. Whatever your uncle ſays, let me adviſe you, Miſs, never marry withont conſent.

Cla-

CLARISSA.

How unlucky all this is! (aſide to Watchit)

WOODVIL.

And yet, Sir William, ſince it is done, it may be for the beſt. Have you ſeen the lady?

Sir WILLIAM.

Seen her! What ſhould I ſee her for? Did you ever hear a man reaſon like him? (to Clariſſa) Do you think, Ma'am,—you ſeem prudent, and I will aſk you?—Do you think it would be right to ſee a perſon, who has thrown my family into ſuch confuſion, and has been the ruin of my ſon? I could only ſpeak the language of reproach: would it be right of me to ſay harſh things to her face?

CLARISSA.

I believe you would not willingly act ſo cruel a part.

Sir WILLIAM.

No, no; it would anſwer no end.

WOODVIL.

I beg your pardon: you might find yourſelf miſtaken: you might, perhaps, ſee a lady poſſeſſed of accompliſhments, that would kindle up a flame even in your own breaſt, fond as you are of ſerving your intereſt.

Sir WILLIAM.

No, no; there I ſhould be proof. I am not tinder, tinder, to take fire at the ſparkling of an eye. I have ſeen as much love among people who marry without any at all, as I have among your ſighing, whining, generous lovers.

Mrs. Woodvil.

That I can vouch. There was no great matter of love, Mr. Woodvil, between us at firſt: at leaſt on your part; but all in good time; it came by degrees: and, I think, you will allow that we have lived pure and happy.

Woodvil. (aſide to Mrs. Woodvil)

I wiſh you would not make yourſelf ridiculous.

Sir William.

Mr. Woodvil, to cut the matter ſhort, my ſon has ruined himſelf.—A blockhead, to throw himſelf away in this manner!——Did you ever ſee the fellow? (to Clariſſa)

Clarissa. (in great confuſion)

Yes, Sir; I have ſeen him; and when you ſee him again, perhaps——

Sir William.

Never; I will never ſee his face.—Marry without my conſent, and a beggar too!—He ſhall ſee that I am not to be trifled with. My fortune is in my own power; he ſhall be diſinherited, and that's the marriage-portion he will get by this amiable lady, on whom he has fixed his affections.

CLARISSA.

Oh! Heaven! ſupport me. (ſhe faints)

Sir WILLIAM. (catching her in his arms)

Hey! what's the matter now? She is not well.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Watchit, run for the hartſhorn.

WATCHIT.

I will, Madam. Poor young lady! You had better take her into the air, Sir. Dear me, I am in ſuch a flutter. [Exit.

Sir WILLIAM. (ſupporting her)

She looks very handſome. Is ſhe ſubject to theſe diſorders, Mr. Woodvil?

WOODVIL.

I fancy not; ſhe is tired after her journey.

Sir WILLIAM.

Her colour returns: ſhe is coming to herſelf. Very beautiful indeed! If that fool, my ſon, had made ſuch a choice! How do you find yourſelf, Ma'am?

CLARISSA.

Oh! Sir!—I beg your pardon.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Leave her to my care. Step with me, my dear; the air will do her good. Come along. [Exit.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

You have not as yet recovered your ſtrength: let me attend you.

CLARISSA.

You are very polite, Sir, but I would not give you ſo much trouble.

Sir WILLIAM.

Trouble! it will be a pleaſure. Mr. Woodvil, I ſhall return in a moment. [Exit with Clariſſa.

WOODVIL.

He ſeems ſtruck already. How I ſhall laugh, if my ſcheme ſucceeds!

Enter LOVEWORTH.

LOVEWORTH. (peeping in)

Mr. Woodvil, may I venture?

WOODVIL.

For a moment you may. If you but knew how things are going on here——

LOVEWORTH.

I overheard it all. But what have I done to Mrs. Woodvil? She takes a part againſt me.

WOODVIL.

She talks in her uſual ſtrain, without an idea of what ſhe would be at. Keep out of her way. I would not have her know you are in the houſe: the ſecret would ſoon eſcape, only by way of converſation, as ſhe calls it. I cannot help laughing at this plot of mine: ſhould your wife ſteal into Sir William's good graces, before he knows who ſhe is—Ha! ha!

LOVEWORTH.

The contrivance is yours; and if it ſucceeds, I ſhall be for ever obliged to you.

WOODVIL.

It is an honeſt artifice, and worth the experiment.

LOVEWORTH.

Poor Clariſſa! I tremble to think what ſhe feels all this time. The hopes and fears, that agitate her tender boſom, make the interval dreadful.—'Sdeath! I hear ſomebody coming.

WOODVIL.

Fly; leave the room. No, you need not. All is ſafe. It is only Watchit: we ſhall get ſome intelligence from her.

Enter WATCHIT. (laughing)

WATCHIT.

Oh! this is charming. I ſhall die with laughing.

WOODVIL.

What's the matter?

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Juſt as you could wiſh: Sir William is gone into the garden with her. She trembles. and bluſhes; and he ſmiles, and ſays civil things, and takes her by the hand; and ſhe wiſhes to avoid him, and he follows her more eagerly; and my miſtreſs is all in amaze, and does not know what to make of it. She is ſure there is ſome ſecret going forward, and according to cuſtom, ſhe will never reſt till ſhe finds it out. I hear her coming. Mr. Loveworth, the plot's diſcovered, and we are all undone, if ſhe ſees you.

WOODVIL.

And I ſhall be talked to death, if ſhe ſees me. This way, Mr. Loveworth: follow me; I have ſomething further to ſay to you.

LOVEWORTH.

I attend you. Watchit, be upon your guard.

WATCHIT.

Po! po! never ſtand talking. Take care of yourſelf. Don't you hear her coming? Away with you. [puſhing him.

LOVEWORTH.

A thouſand thanks: I ſhall reward your pains. [Exit.

WATCHIT.

Huſh! not a word. How troubleſome theſe men are! now for her curioſity, and a ſpecimen of my talents.

Enter Mrs. Woodvil.

Mrs. Woodvil.

Watchit! you here alone! where is your maſter? Where is Mr. Woodvil? I left him here: where is he gone? What is he about? Is any body with him?

Watchit.

Not ſo loud, if you pleaſe, Ma'am: he deſired not to be diſturbed. Mr. Ruin, the lawyer, is with him: buſineſs of great importance upon the anvil.

Mrs. Woodvil.

Indeed! tell me; what is it?

Watchit.

'Law, Ma'am! as if you did not know: why, you are acquainted with the whole affair.

Mrs. Woodvil.

Not a ſyllable, as I am a ſinner: nobody ever tells me any thing; and yet, I don't know why. I never repeat a word; I am as cloſe as oak. Well, tell me, Watchit; tell me the buſineſs.

Watchit.

Why, for a matter o'that, if you don't know it already, it is fit you ſhould. But then, Heaven help me! I am but a ſervant, and if the like of me talks in the family——

Mrs. Woodvil.

But you are ſafe with me; you may do good by imparting every thing to me.

Watchit.

Yes, Ma'am, I know that; but my maſter has forbid me to ſay a word.

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

He ſhall never know that you ſpoke to me. I never betray any body. I always think before I ſpeak.

WATCHIT.

Why then, if you will promiſe——

Mrs. WOODVIL.

I do promiſe, and I promiſe to reward you. Well?

WATCHIT.

Don't you know ſomething about this young lady, Ma'am?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

No; nothing upon the face of the earth, except that ſhe is Mr. Woodvil's niece.

WATCHIT.

Yes, that of courſe: every body knows that. But, look you here, Ma'am—I am ruined if you ever ſay you heard it from me—Her errand in coming to this houſe is whimſical enough—She is in love; deep, far gone!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Ay!

WATCHIT.

And is come into theſe parts in purſuit of the perſon ſhe is ſo much ſmitten with.

Mrs. Woodvil.

Go on; go on, Watchit: who is ſhe in love with? tell me all.

Watchit.

Can't you gueſs?

Mrs. Woodvil,

No, quite in the dark about it. Well, who is it?

Watchit.

You know how diſobliged Sir William is by his ſon's miſconduct; and you know that he has threatened to diſinherit young Mr. Loveworth, and marry again.

Mrs. Woodvil,

Right; go on.

Watchit.

Now this young lady—but upon my life you muſt take no notice—this young lady is in love with Sir William up to the eyes, and my maſter would be glad to make a match of it. Who can blame him, if he wants to provide a good ſettlement for his own relation?

Mrs. Woodvil,

To be ſure.

Watchit.

My maſter you know is a little ſhy: he does not like like to open the affair too abruptly to Sir William; and that's what, I believe, he is now contriving with his attorney. Leave it all to their management, Ma'am. If you interfere, maſter will ſuſpect me.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Well, well! very well! any thing more?

WATCHIT.

Did not you ſee how the lady fainted away, when Sir William aſked her opinion?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

So ſhe did; I ſee it all plain enough now.

WATCHIT.

When a young lady faints into a man's arms——

Mrs. WOODVIL.

No doubt; the meaning is clear.

WATCHIT.

I have had ſome chat with her: ſhe is hurt to the very quick to ſee Sir William made unhappy by his ſon: ſhe thinks him the beſt of characters, and what is very odd, ſhe ſays he is the handſomeſt man ſhe ever ſet eyes upon. She ſaw him laſt ſummer at the muſick-meeting at Saliſbury, and has raved about him ever ſince.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Indeed!—It will be a good match for the girl, if it can be brought about.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Yes, for ſure: ſhe owned her love to me, but ſhe rather thinks Sir William a little cruel—no, no; ſhe did not ſay cruel;—A little ſevere to the ſon: he ought, ſhe ſays, to make a proviſion for him; and if it ſhould be her luck to marry Sir William, ſhe will intercede for the young gentleman, though he has been ſo imprudent as to marry without his father's conſent.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

The good girl!

WATCHIT.

Yes, ſhe is all goodneſs; ſhe bears the character of it. As ſweet a temper as a body would wiſh to know. As I live and breathe, here comes my maſter —No; It's Sir William. Don't take any notice to him. Leave it all to Mr. Woodvil's contrivance. He knows how to bring about the match. Here he comes, Ma'am. I am gone. If you ſay a word of what I have been telling you, it will be as much as my place is worth, [Exit.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Go, go your way. Truly! as if I did not know how to keep a ſecret.

Enter Sir WILLIAM.

Sir WILLIAM.

I admire your garden, Mrs. Woodvil. It is much im-improved ſince I ſaw it; and your niece, as Milton has it,

———Oft ſtooping to ſupport
Each flow'r of tender ſtalk, mindleſs the while
Herſelf, the faireſt unſupported flow'r.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

That is ſo pretty, and ſo gallant!

Sir WILLIAM.

If that ſon of mine had propoſed for her, what objection could I have made? None; I ſhould have been pleaſed with an alliance in my friend Woodvil's family.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

I am really much chagrined for your ſon. There is no ſaying any thing in his defence.

Sir WILLIAM.

No, let him repent it; and he will have reaſon: I ſhall marry again. Your niece, I think, has never been in theſe parts before: any particular reaſon for her coming now?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

No;—I believe—(ſmiles at him) don't aſk me; I never know any thing.

Sir WILLIAM.

Nay, I beg pardon,

Mrs.

Mrs. Woodvil.

No harm, Sir William—I could—But no, no; I know nothing—I can't help ſmiling—you would ſmile too if you knew all: but let Mr. Woodvil tell you.

Sir William.

Well, I ſuppoſe he will, if it be proper.

Mrs. Woodvil.

Yes, I dare ſay he will.—Well, you are a lucky man. Pray, let me aſk you: was you at Saliſbury laſt ſummer?

Sir William.

I was, Madam. why do you aſk?

Mrs. Woodvil.

Aſk me no queſtions.—It is diverting too—(ſmiles at him) Only now by way of converſation, did you ſee the young lady you have been juſt talking to in our garden?

Sir William.

She eſcaped my obſervation.

Mrs. Woodvil.

Well, I wonder at it.—Nothing eſcapes her. (ſmiles at him) She ſaw you.—Promiſe me not to ſay a word——

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

You may rely upon me.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

It is very whimſical:—ſhe ſaw you and is deeply ſmitten.

Sir WILLIAM.

With me?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

With you: take no notice. Mr. Woodvil will take it very ill, if he hears that I ſaid a word. She grieves to ſee you afflicted as you are by the behaviour of your ſon. She takes an intereſt in every thing that concerns you.

Sir WILLIAM.

I am greatly obliged to her.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

So you are, if you know all.—Well, young girls do fall in love ſo unaccountably. She is up to the eyes in love with you. (laughing heartily)

Sir WILLIAM.

In love with me!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

She loves you; I know it. So now you may make your own uſe of it.—And look ye—She rather thinks you ſevere to your ſon, and I can tell you, if ſhe has ever any influence, you will find her his beſt friend.

She

She will intercede for him; ſhe will never be at reſt till you make ſome proviſion for him.

Sir WILLIAM.

A generous way of thinking.—In love with me!—(looking pleaſed) No, no; it cannot be.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

It is certainly ſo.

Sir WILLIAM. (laughing)

No, no;—ſhe is very handſome. If my ſon had been able to diſtinguiſh her merit——

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Who could have blamed him?

Sir WILLIAM.

Quite another thing that would have been. You are a laughing at me all this time.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Never ſuſpect it, Sir William: did you ever know me guilty of a joke?

Sir WILLIAM.

Your niece is quite recovered now, I dare ſay.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You ſaw how ſhe fainted in your arms?

Was

Sir WILLIAM.

Was there any thing particular in that?

Mrs. WOODVIL. (ſmiles at him)

You don't know the impreſſion you have made. —She was terribly ſhocked at ſeeing you ſo unhappy. She took it to heart.

Sir WILLIAM.

I'll take another turn in the garden, I think. Now I recollect, it was with a peculiar glance ſhe eyed me. Will you take a turn in the garden?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You had better go alone. They may ſuſpect that I have been telling you.—Huſh! not a word—here ſhe comes, and Mr. Woodvil with her.

Enter WOODVIL, and CLARISSA.

WOODVIL.

Come, come, you are well now, and the company won't allow you to ſhun them.

Sir WILLIAM.

By no means. I hope you find yourſelf perfectly recovered. (going up to her.)

CLARISSA. (diſconcerted)

It was only a ſudden ſurprize, Sir: it is over now: I am much obliged to you.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

I heartily rejoice to ſee you ſo well. (goes to Mrs. Woodvil) Did you mark thoſe ſtolen glances? (aſide)

CLARISSA. (aſide to Woodvil)

If you but knew the inward conflict I endure.

WOODVIL.

Well, well; ſummon up your ſpirits. (aſide)

Sir WILLIAM. (looks at her)

She is wonderfully agreeable. (aſide to Mrs. Woodvil) I am ſorry, Madam—(going to Clariſſa) that I abruptly mentioned any thing of my ſon's behaviour. I ſpoke harſhly perhaps, and my violence might have a ſudden effect upon your ſenſibility.

CLARISSA. (in confuſion)

I will not diſſemble, Sir, that the warmth and violence of your reſentment did overpower my ſpirits. I am ſorry that your ſon has offended you. If I might preſume, his caſe may admit of ſome alleviation. The lady may, perhaps, be to blame.

Sir WILLIAM.

To blame! ay, to be ſure ſhe is. A woman without any ſubſtance, without a ſhilling——

Mrs. WOODVIL.

That is an objection for certain.

CLA-

CLARISSA.

And yet the lady may be of a family——

Sir WILLIAM.

Yes, family enough, but a ruined family.

CLARISSA.

Misfortune you will hardly think an object of ridicule, Sir William.

Sir WILLIAM.

It is a good reaſon to ſhun the alliance.

CLARISSA.

I am an unfit perſon to take the lady's part. [Walks away.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You ſee how unwilling ſhe is to contradict you. (aſide to Sir William.)

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide to Mrs. Woodvil)

I admire her of all things.

WOODVIL. (aſide to Clariſſa.)

Conſider that my friend Loveworth's happineſs is at ſtake; go on with this, and he will have reaſon to thank you.

Mrs. WOODVIL. (aſide to Sir William)

I told you ſhe would take your ſon's part.

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide)

I like her the better for it: it beſpeaks a generous mind.—Madam, (following Clariſſa) I admire your delicacy: you have ſomething to offer in behalf of the lady, whom my ſon—I never ſaw her, and I believe I never ſhall. Do you think it would be right in me to ſee her, only to ſpeak the language of reproach?

CLARISSA.

She would never be able to bear the preſence of an incenſed and angry father, who imputes to her the diſtractions of his family——(almoſt in tears)

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide to Mrs. Woodvil)

How tender her ſentiments are!

Mrs. WOODVIL. (aſide to him)

She feels for your uneaſineſs. I think you may be now convinced, that all I have told you is true.

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide)

Yes, I ſee it plainly: I have always had a young look. (walking towards Clariſſa) I ſhall be glad to hear ſo agreeable an advocate, though I fancy you will find the cauſe already determined.

CLARISSA.

I would not preſume too far, Sir; but ſtill there may be ſomething to ſay for your ſon. His regard for the lady may be founded on a ſincere eſteem for her good qualities; for good qualities ſhe may have; it is at leaſt poſſible that ſhe may.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

Po! that's a ſuppoſition in the air.

CLARISSA. (in confuſion)

I grant it, Sir.

Mrs. WOODVIL. (to Sir William)

Mark her deference for you.

CLARISSA.

I can't pretend to vindicate the lady, Sir. Of her merit I can have but little to ſay: but your ſon—he has undoubted virtues.

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide to Woodvil)

How does ſhe know?

WOODVIL.

She has heard me ſpeak of him.

Sir WILLIAM.

Why, to ſay the truth, Madam, my ſon had ſome merit; till he ruined all by this raſh action: the fellow did carry his letter of recommendation about him.

CLARISSA.

Then the lady, on whom he has fixed his choice, is to be pitied. If her inclination is not merely mercenary, but raiſed and kindled by deſert; if ſhe ſincerely loves him, and if by marrying him, ſhe has ſacrificed herſelf, and the object of her affection too—

(walks away, endeavouring to ſuppreſs her tears)

Sir WILLIAM. (to Woodvil)

She has a delicate way of thinking.

WOODVIL.

The moſt tender-hearted girl in the world.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

And I fancy ſhe is a little nerviſh into the bargain: I uſed to be nerviſh myſelf.

Sir WILLIAM.

She affects me ſtrangely. Come, we'll talk no more about this unlucky buſineſs. With your leave, Madam, (going to Clariſſa) we will change the ſubject.

CLARISSA.

I ſhould be ſorry to give you diſpleaſure, Sir. I hope I have not preſumed too far. (ſhe walks away) Heigho!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

A tender ſymptom that ſigh. (to Sir William)

Sir WILLIAM. (advancing towards Clariſſa)

You ſhould not ſigh, Madam; it is a bad habit.—She is an angel!—(advancing nearer) A young lady, like you, ſhould be all gaiety, all wit, pleaſure, and vivacity.—(ſmiling) You have no reaſon, I hope, for ſighing.

Enter

Enter WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Dinner's upon table, Sir.

WOODVIL.

Very well: come, Sir William.

Sir WILLIAM.

Will you pleaſe to favour me with your hand, Ma'am?

CLARISSA. (frightened)

You do me too much honour, Sir.

Sir WILLIAM.

The honour is to me. (he takes her hand) Mrs. Woodvil, you are right (ſmiling at her) Mr. Woodvil, you have an elegant young lady here—Madam, I have the honour to attend you.

[Exit with Clariſſa.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Come, Mr. Woodvil, come along, my love. I am in the ſecret for all you, and I hope you will be able to make a match of it. [Exit.

WOODVIL.

In the ſecret is ſhe? Watchit, have you been blabbing?

WATCHIT.

Not for the world, Sir: ſhe knows nothing of the matter,

WOODVIL.

Very well: keep her in the dark, and things may go on as I could wiſh. [Exit.

WATCHIT.

This is charming: the hook is baited, and Sir William will be gudgeon enough to bite. Oh! ho! ho! my ſtars! this is for ever the way of the world.

Men for their actions call their neighbours fools,
Then do the ſame, and mock their former rules.

End of the FIRST ACT.

ACT

ACT the SECOND.

Enter WATCHIT and LOVEWORTH.

LOVEWORTH.

IN love with her, ſay you?

WATCHIT.

In love; up to his eyes; he has it through the very heart; paſſionately fond of her. They are all together below ſtairs; Mrs. Woodvil, by my contrivance, has helped to bring it all about. She thinks ſhe is in the ſecret, and is completely happy that ſhe has ſomething that ſhe ought to tell nobody, and which burns in her breaſt till ſhe tells it to every body. Mr. Woodvil is pleaſed to ſee his ſcheme in a fair way to ſucceed. He is every moment running out of the room, to laugh in private at the whole affair. There, Sir; does not that make you happy?

LOVEWORTH.

I am for ever obliged to you, Mrs. Watchit. This is the luckieſt incident! my father has plunged deeper into the ſnare than I expected.

WATCHIT.

Yes; he is caught. All dinner-time his attention was fixed upon your lady; and the ſweet confuſion ſhe was in convinced Sir William, that it was the bluſh of love that coloured her cheek. When the ladies withdrew, he would not ſtick to his bottle, according to cuſtom: no, no; he is tired of drinking; he roſe from table, and went about the houſe from room to room in queſt of your lady, ſtruggling to conceal his deſign, and looking ſo fooliſh at every diſappointment! At laſt he found her, and ladies, ſays he, I am come to beg a diſh of tea of you.

LOVEWORTH.

He never uſed to drink tea.

WATCHIT.

I know it. And then had you but ſeen him at the tea-table, with his aukward civility, watching opportunities to aſſiſt the ladies, and with a buſtle of good-nature putting every thing into confuſion.

LOVEWORTH.

Perfectly like him: I know his way.

WATCHIT.

The leaſt motion was too much for your lady's delicacy; it gave him pain to ſee her have ſo much trouble: "Ma'am, give me leave to pour out the "tea for you.—Sir, you give yourſelf too much trou-"ble—My deareſt Madam, to attend you is a plea-ſure;"—And at laſt, in a hurry of politeneſs, he tumbled down the tea-table, broke the china, and ſcalded the dogs. They fell a barking; he made apologies; "ladies I beg your pardon.—Sir, you need "not.—I proteſt it was an accident: bow, wow, "wow;" and ſo all was uproar, laughter, noiſe, and confuſion.

LOVE-

LOVEWORTH.

But poor Clariſſa all this time!

WATCHIT.

She acts her part delightfully.

LOVEWORTH.

Has Sir William declared himſelf to her?

WATCHIT.

Not as yet, I believe: but he is ſtruck with her, that is too plain. I don't know whether ſhe ſees it, but every body elſe does.

LOVEWORTH.

If he once takes it into his head to make love to her, it will be a ſtroke of ſurprize upon her. I fear ſhe will hardly have courage enough to carry on the plot.

WATCHIT.

I'll be anſwerable for her. No want of talents there; that I can ſee faſt enough.

LOVEWORTH.

Is there no danger of his coming up ſtairs?

WATCHIT.

Po! he can't ſtir: your lady has him like a great gudgeon at the end of her line.

LOVE-

LOVEWORTH.

But Mrs. Woodvil may be prying about the houſe.

WATCHIT.

Never fear her; there is enough to employ her below ſtairs.

LOVEWORTH.

Well, amongſt you be it. If Sir William is really ſmitten, ſome good may come of this.

WATCHIT.

We ſhall manage the old gentleman to ſome purpoſe. Huſh! ſtay, ſtay; I hear ſomebody coming. Mrs. Woodvil, as I live and breathe: away, Mr. Loveworth; in there, into that room (he runs in; ſhe ſhuts the door) Was there ever ſuch a man? We ſhall be detected. (ſpeaks through the key-hole) Bolt the door.

Enter Mrs. WOODVIL.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

So, Mrs. Buſy-body! what were you doing in that room?

WATCHIT.

That room, Ma'am? I was not in that room. The door is locked, Ma'am.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Yes, I recollect: I locked it myſelf. Watchit, come come hither. There is ſome myſtery in all this, which I don't comprehend.

WATCHIT.

Myſtery, Ma'am?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Hold your tongue; liſten to me. Mr. Woodvil was every moment running out of the room, and whiſpering with you, and ſtifling a laugh, that I ſaw playing upon every feature of his face: what does all this mean?

WATCHIT.

Mean, Ma'am? Why that my maſter is glad to ſee his niece in a fair way of preferment. He is pleaſed, and he looks pleaſed; can any thing be more natural?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

There is ſomething which I cannot penetrate. Mr. Woodvil and Sir William are now locked up in the ſtudy, and I am ſhut out: what is that for?

WATCHIT.

Dear Ma'am, the men always ſettle theſe things among themſelves you know. There is money I ſuppoſe to be talked of, and jointures, and ſuch like.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Watchit, I ſuſpect you: you know more than you tell me. And this young lady,—I doubt whether ſhe is my huſband's niece. It looks romantic, I think.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Dear Madam!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Very romantic, and not a little marvellous. Why ſhe knows nothing of the family. I have tried her; aſked her queſtions; ſhe bluſhes and looks ſilly, and gives anſwers that are juſt ſo much of nothing at all.

WATCHIT.

Dear me! you know, Ma'am, ſhe was not educated at home: in a boarding-ſchool at Chelſea from five years old.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Was ſhe? That may be. And yet ſhe is not like my huſband's ſiſter: all the family pictures are in that room: I'll go and examine the picture this moment; and, Watchit, do you go and intice her up ſtairs. I'll confront her and the picture; you will then ſee that there is no reſemblance, none in the world. Step, and bring her up ſtairs, I'll go and view the picture this moment. [going.

WATCHIT. (aſide)

This muſt never be; we are all blown up in the air—Madam, Madam, you are quite wrong: this is all nothing; there is indeed an affair, which if—— a——

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Ay! what affair? What is it?

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

People bewilder themſelves about trifles: what I have to tell you is of conſequence.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Indeed! of conſequence, ſay you?

WATCHIT.

It is fit Mr. Woodvil ſhould know it, and without loſs of time: immediately; now, now, this very inſtant.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Tell it now then: how tedious you are?

WATCHIT.

Law, Ma'am! you are ſo impatient!—what ſhall I ſay to her? (aſide)—The affair, Madam, is this ——If what I hear be true, it is enough to alarm the whole family.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Bleſs me! what is it? Speak. Why conceal it from me?

WATCHIT.

You know my character, Ma'am; not one of your buſy meddlers in what does not belong to them. And yet it were a pity Sir William ſhould carry it in this faſhion, and impoſe upon good people, without ſo much as a hint to put you all upon your guard.

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You terrify me: no more preamble; go on.

WATCHIT.

Have you heard nothing of Sir William lately?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Nothing particular.

WATCHIT.

Ah! Madam!—Don't you ſee that there is ſomething unaccountable in his falling in love at firſt ſight?—That is always his way; a general lover, that I can tell you. A ſeraglio of ladies! and though he rails at his ſon, he has gone lately and married one of his Madams, as privately as he could, and he thinks nobody knows it.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Are you ſure of this?

WATCHIT.

What do I keep up an intimacy with Mrs. TATTLEAID, his houſekeeper, for, and all the reſt of the family? Sad doings!—you muſt not ſay you had it from me—but you ought to know the affair, and nobody will make a diſcreeter uſe of it—he has married his Dulcinea; and becauſe he fancies it a profound ſecret, he thunders out againſt his ſon; and all this pretended love, in a moment, for my maſter's niece, is only to decoy her, to deceive her, to ruin her, poor dear young lady! (in tears) I pity her ſo I do, and I am ſure ſhe deſerves a better lot, than to be the the prey of ſuch vile, profligate libertines, that's what ſhe does. (crying bitterly)

Mrs. WOODVIL.

This is very good, this is kind of you, and the whole family is obliged to you. The girl's ruin muſt be prevented. I could not have thought Sir William capable——

WATCHIT.

Lord, Ma'am! he is capable of any thing: the whole pariſh knows it: but tenants are cautious, and huſh-money goes a great way. There is not a moment to be loſt, Ma'am: if ſomething is not done, and that directly too——

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Leave it to my diſcretion: I'll go and ſee what he and Mr. Woodvil are about.

WATCHIT.

Don't ſeem to know any thing of the matter to Sir William. Suppoſe you take my maſter aſide.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

It is fit he ſhould know it: ſtay you there: leave all to my diſcretion: we need not quarrel with Sir William you know. I am glad I have found this out. I'll keep my own ſecret, and yet have an eye upon their motions. This is ſuch a diſcovery.

[Exit.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

So; I have got rid of her. She will go with her ſtory to Mr. Woodvil, and he will only laugh at her.

Enter LOVEWORTH.

LOVEWORTH.

A deſperate game you have been playing, Watchit: this may embaraſs us all.

WATCHIT.

We ſhould have been in a worſe ſcrape, had her curioſity led her to diſcover you lurking in that room: don't you ſee that? Nothing but a new ſecret could have drawn her off from the ſcent ſhe was upon.

LOVEWORTH.

Well, I don't know what to ſay to it?

Enter CLARISSA.

CLARISSA.

Oh! Watchit; I am frightened out of my wits. Mr. Loveworth, how do you find yourſelf all this while? I am ſo glad to have an opportunity of ſpeaking to you. Sir William will never forgive me, when he finds out who I am. And what is in the wind with Mrs. Woodvil? I met her on the ſtairs; the caſt of her eye terrified me to death. She has found out the whole affair, I believe.

LOVE-

LOVEWORTH.

You are too eaſily alarmed: if you will but command yourſelf——

WATCHIT.

Run, Mr. Loveworth; get out of the way. I hear Sir William.

[Exit Loveworth and ſhuts the door after him.

CLARISSA.

It were beſt to explain every thing to him.

WATCHIT.

By no means, Madam: things are not ripe as yet.

Enter Sir WILLIAM.

Sir WILLIAM.

Ay, here ſhe is. I have found her at laſt.

WATCHIT.

I am glad he is come, and now I'll leave 'em together (aſide)—Did you ſee Madam Woodvil below ſtairs, Sir?

Sir WILLIAM.

I left her with my friend Woodvil,

WATCHIT.

They will be wanting me: you will excuſe me, Madam: dear heart, there will be ſuch a racket!

[Exit.

Sir WILLIAM.

The wench is gone as I could wiſh.—(ſtands looking at Clariſſa)—I never was ſo ſtruck with beauty in all my days (aſide)—I have been—(advancing towards her)—I have been impatient, Madam, for an opportunity: won't you be pleaſed to ſit down?

CLARISSA.

I ſhall be ill again, I fear. (ſits down)

Sir WILLIAM. (ſmiling and ſetting near her)

I ſay, Madam, I have been impatient for an opportunity to—to—what's come over me? I feel ſtrangely affected (aſide)——I am no longer a ſtranger, Madam, to you and your affections.

CLARISSA.

Sir! (frightened)

Sir WILLIAM.

I know you, Madam; I know your way of thinking; and what at firſt appeared a myſtery——

CLARISSA.

If you know me, Sir, I hope your generoſity will excuſe——

Sir WILLIAM.

No apology, pray. I am glad to find that I am not an object of your hatred.

CLARISSA.

Hatred, Sir?—If you could read my heart, you would perceive there the moſt perfect eſteem——

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

Eſteem! (laughing conceitedly) with what reſerve ſhe phraſes it? (aſide)—Eſteem, Madam? Call it by a more tender name. (drawing nearer) We are now alone, and may throw off all diſguiſe. Come, come; (ſmiling) though you don't know it, I am in the ſecret.—Mrs. Woodvil has repoſed a confidence in me: ſhe has told me all.

CLARISSA.

Then, Sir, ſhe has told you, that I am diſpoſed to pay you every mark of attention and regard: that it is impoſſible to have a more ſincere——

Sir WILLIAM.

You honour, Ma'am; you do me honour; and if you chuſe to paſs your time at Grove-Place——

CLARISSA.

It is the ambition of my heart, Sir. It is the happineſs at which I aſpire.

Sir WILLIAM.

This open, this candid declaration tranſports me, beyond the power of words to expreſs. You confirm all that Mrs. Woodvil told me; and it ſhall be the ſtudy of my life to promote your happineſs.

CLARISSA.

You have given, a new turn to my ſpirits, Sir William: you have raiſed me to new life. I am for ever obliged to Mrs. Woodvil for bringing about what I deſpaired of ever attaining.

Sir WILLIAM.

We are both obliged to her: and as to my ſon—I can be very deciſive—For your ſake I am determined that he ſhall never enter my doors.

CLARISSA.

Sir! (in great confuſion)

Sir WILLIAM.

An abandoned profligate!

CLARISSA.

Your words alarm me, Sir: you terrify me out of my ſenſes. I thought Mrs. Woodvil had ſettled every thing.

Sir WILLIAM.

She has, Ma'am; ſhe has ſettled matters to our mutual advantage. She has told me too, that you have a kind of partiality for my ſon: but your goodneſs muſt not be thrown away upon ſo undeſerving a——

CLARISSA.

I confeſs, I have a partiality for him. And after all, his crime may not be ſo great as you imagine. He has married without a fortune; but you may find hereafter that he has connected himſelf with a perſon who will ſhew herſelf, in every part of her conduct, ſenſible of the obligation. If ſhe has not brought riches into your family, ſhe may have qualities that will more than atone for the want of fortune. Inſtead of the pride, and I may ſay, the inſolence of wealth, complyance and condeſcenſion may be hers. If ſhe has no right to expenſive pleaſures, ſhe may practice œco-œconomy; and, Sir, ſhe may be gratefull, in proportion to the kindneſs and generoſity of the family, into which ſhe has married.

Sir WILLIAM.

She argues the point well: ſhe will ſuit my temper exactly. (aſide) I admire your ſentiments, Madam, but ſtill——

CLARISSA.

Permit me, Sir, to ſay a word more. When a perſon in affluent circumſtances, or of conſiderable expectations, can forego all views of intereſt, and follow the impulſe of elegant, of generous affections; the lady, on whom he fixes his choice, may in return make his inclinations the rule of her conduct. In his happineſs hers may center. And if I may ſpeak out, ſhe, who deſtitute of riches, brings honour and virtue into a family, carries with her what many families want.

Sir WILLIAM.

There is ſpirit and good ſenſe in every thing ſhe utters. (aſide) You are a powerfull advocate; you plead too well for a graceleſs libertine. But have a a care; don't carry it too far. You may prevail, and hurt yourſelf. It is your intereſt to urge no more. To differ from you will not be in my power. I feel your influence already: It is reſiſtleſs, and ſo I ſhall go and tell your uncle this very moment. He ſhall know my mind immediately, and then, Madam, the whole affair will be concluded.—Your behaviour has charmed me; (bowing to her) it has won my heart. I ſhall wait upon you, as ſoon as I have talked the matter over with Mr. Woodvil. (bows)—She is a charming girl, and I'll marry her without delay.

[Exit.

CLARISSA.

Every thing concluded!—what does he mean? There is ſome ſtrange miſunderſtanding between us.

Enter WATCHIT.

WATCHIT. (laughing)

Excuſe me, Madam: I can't help laughing: this goes on charmingly.

CLARISSA.

Oh! Watchit, what ſhall I do?

WATCHIT.

You have done admirably.

Enter LOVEWORTH.

LOVEWORTH.

Yes, I am witneſs: ſhe is carrying on an intrigue in my hearing, and almoſt before my face.

CLARISSA.

Oh! Mr. Loveworth, if you had any feeling for my diſtreſs——

LOVEWORTH.

Diſtreſs! what diſtreſs? You have gained a complete victory; you have made an abſolute conqueſt. Maintain your ground, and you force him preſently to ſurrender upon your own terms.

CLA-

CLARISSA.

We had better acquaint him with the whole truth. It does not become me to try theſe artifices. When he finds himſelf the dupe of this ſtratagem, he will never forgive me.

WATCHIT.

Dear Madam, you are enough to diſtract a body; when things are in ſuch a fine way, you are going to ruin yourſelf and Mr. Loveworth too.

LOVEWORTH.

It is even ſo: Sir William has not gone far enough as yet: when he is upon the very brink of matrimony with you, can he afterwards condemn my conduct? When he finds himſelf the captive of your beauty, will not that be my apology? And do you wiſh to deprive me of it?

CLARISSA.

You know I don't; but I am afraid of provoking his reſentment: I have no right to paſs a trick upon him.

WATCHIT.

Huſh! you are both diſputing, and the enemy is ſtealing a march upon you. Here comes Madam Woodvil. Back to your room Mr. Loveworth, run back this moment.

LOVEWORTH.

Confuſion! that troubleſome woman! [Exit.

CLARISSA.

Let me go with him.

WATCHIT.

No, that will never do: you are wanted here. Stay, ſtay, I have the key, and I'll ſecure the door. I know her curioſity; but if ſhe outwits me——(locks the door)

Enter Mrs. WOODVIL.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Clariſſa, I have been looking for you every where. ——So! (ſeeing Watchit at the door) At that door again?—What is going forward? (aſide)——I ſay, where have you been, Clariſſa? What have you been about?

WATCHIT.

I wanted to ſhew the lady the family pictures in the next room, Ma'am; but I can't find the key.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Well, well; never mind it now: another time will do.—Clariſſa, where have you been hiding yourſelf?—Your uncle wants you below: Sir William is prodigiouſly enamoured, and he means to finiſh the buſineſs without loſs of time. I have given you a helping hand, I promiſe you.

CLARISSA.

Your intentions are very good, Ma'am; but you will excuſe me at preſent. I cannot go down any more to night.

WATCHIT.

WATCHIT.

Yes; let us go down: get her away from this place. (aſide)

Mrs. WOODVIL.

What are you meddling for, Mrs. Pert? What have you been ſaying?

CLARISSA.

She has ſaid nothing improper: but the hurry of this affair—I have reaſons for deferring it.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Reaſons! what reaſons? Tell me your reaſons. Come, come; you muſt comply. Watchit, do you ſtep and do as I ordered you.

WATCHIT.

Yes, Ma'am, I ſhall take care. [Exit.

CLARISSA.

Permit me to continue here.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

By no means: would you mar you fortune?

CLARISSA.

If you will inſiſt upon it— [Exit.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Oh! it muſt be ſo. We cannot diſpenſe with your company. (going, looks back) And now I will ſee

ſee what Watchit was about in that room: I have a double key to every door in the houſe, though ſhe little thinks it. Yes, here is the key. (takes a candle off the table) I will know what ſhe has been about; I am reſolved I will. (goes to unlock the door)

Enter WATCHIT.

WATCHIT. (peeping in and ſpeaking ſoftly)

I thought as much: I gueſſed ſhe would be at that work. The deuce go with it! how did ſhe come by that key? What ſhall I do?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Now for it. (opens the door and goes in)

WATCHIT.

This is the very malice of fortune.

Mrs. WOODVIL. (within)

A man here! help! murder! oh!

WATCHIT.

So; ſhe faints; ſhe falls in a ſwoon: the candle out too! oh! the luckieſt accident!

Enter LOVEWORTH. (in a violent hurry.

LOVEWORTH.

Death and confuſion! I am diſcovered.

WATCHIT.

No, no, no; all's ſafe; ſhe is in a fit; leave her to herherſelf. (takes the other candle off the table) This way; follow me; make haſte. (going)

LOVEWORTH.

Away then; let me eſcape. (going)

WATCHIT. (ſtopping at the door)

More misfortunes! your father coming up ſtairs!

LOVEWORTH.

What brings him again? Is there no door, no window——

WATCHIT.

Here, here; come this way; ſtand there. (places him at the ſide of the door) Don't ſay a word. (puts out the candle)

Enter Sir WILLIAM.

Sir WILLIAM.

Not here? all in darkneſs: what is become of her? (walking forward I left her in this room.

LOVEWORTH.

Fortune, I thank you! I'll get out of his way. [Exit.

Sir WILLIAM.

If the young dog marries to pleaſe his fancy, I have a right to pleaſe mine.

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL. (within)

Oh! oh! oh!——help——

Sir WILLIAM.

How? the cry of diſtreſs! ſhe is taken ill again! fear: which is the way?

Mrs. WOODVIL. (within)

Oh! oh! I ſhall die.——

Sir WILLIAM.

Zookers! I muſt relieve her.

WATCHIT.

For the love of mercy, Sir. (kneels before him)

Sir WILLIAM.

Another voice?

Mrs. WOODVIL. (within)

Oh! oh!——

Sir WILLIAM.

It comes this way: I muſt go to her aſſiſtance. (runs forward, and tumbles over a chair) Hey! what the devil is all this?

WATCHIT.

Thieves! murder! all broke into the houſe: have compaſſion upon a poor ——

(lays hold of Sir William)

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

All mad I believe: houſe; ſervants; will nobody come?

WATCHIT. (holding him)

You ſhall not have your wicked will: I never will conſent: my virtue is all I have to depend upon. Mr. Woodvil; Robert; George.

Sir WILLIAM.

Hey! what's the matter now?

WATCHIT.

Spare my life; ſpare my honour; ſpare my innocence.

Sir WILLIAM.

This is the ſtrangeſt accident!

WATCHIT.

Will nobody come? A parcel of Jews to ruin all Chriſtian virtue.

Enter WOODVIL, with a light.

WATCHIT.

You ſhall not force me: I never will yield.

WOODVIL.

Hey! what have we here?

Sir

WATCHIT.

Oh! Sir, I am glad you are come. This vile man, I don't know who he is——

WOODVIL.

Sir William!

WATCHIT.

How! Sir William?

Sir WILLIAM.

Mr. Woodvil! You are come moſt opportunely. Such confuſion here!

Mrs. WOODVIL. (within)

Oh! will no body bring a light?

WOODVIL.

Hey! more diſtreſs! what is the meaning of all this? [Exit.

WATCHIT. (riſing)

I could not have thought ſuch wickedneſs was in you, Sir William.

Sir WILLIAM.

Hell and confuſion! what has poſſeſſed you all?

Enter WOODVIL, leading Mrs. Woodvil.

WOODVIL.

Don't be frightened, my dear: what is the matter?

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Oh! Mr. Woodvil!—a man lurking in that room; he ruſhed upon me. He is come to raviſh the whole family: it could be for nothing elſe. I fainted at the ſight of him.

WATCHIT.

He did the ſame to me, Madam, and here is the wolf in ſheep's cloathing! Sir William, Madam, it was he——

Sir WILLIAM.

I a wolf in ſheep's cloathing!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Yes, now I look at him, it was he.

WATCHIT.

He came upon me, like a deſtroyer of innocence, and you ſaw me (crying) ſtruggling in defence of my dear, dear virtue.

Sir WILLIAM.

Out of their ſenſes! ſtark mad! they are bewitched, and bedevilled, I think.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You wicked man to go to deny it! He attacked me in the moſt furious manner.

WATCHIT.

Yes, and me too, like a tyger, or a mountain bear.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

Get a dark room and a bed of ſtraw for 'em both.

WOODVIL.

Sir William, this is a ſerious matter: what can I think of it?

Sir WILLIAM.

That it is all falſe, Sir.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

It is all too true.

WATCHIT.

You ſaw him offering violence to me. (crying)

Sir WILLIAM.

Confuſion! I tell you it was not ſo.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

I ſay it was ſo.

WATCHIT.

And ſo do I.

Sir WILLIAM.

But I tell you, no.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

And I tell you, yes.

WATCHIT.

And I ſay, yes, yes, yes.

Sir WILLIAM.

No,—damnation!—no.

All ſpeaking together.

WOOD.

WOODVIL.
Why do you all ſpeak at once?

Mrs. WOODVIL.
Hear me, Mr. Woodvil.

WATCHIT.
Let me tell you——

Sir WILLIAM.
No, let me explain——

WOODVIL.
Diſtraction! will you have patience?

All ſpeaking together.

WATCHIT.
He was here, lurking in this room.

Mrs. WOODVIL.
No; he was lurking in the other room.

WATCHIT.
Madam; it was here.

Mrs. WOODVIL.
I tell you it was there.

Sir WILLIAM.
I ſay it was no where.

WATCHIT.
He fell firſt upon me.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

He began with me.

Sir WILLIAM.

I meddled with neither.

WATCHIT.

I was his firſt object. (laughs aſide)

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You his object! hold you your tongue.

WOODVIL.

Hold all your tongues.

WATCHIT.

I muſt ſpeak for my vartue. (laughing aſide)

Sir WILLIAM.

Damnation! If you keep a mad houſe, Mr. Woodvil, why would not you tell me ſo?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Ay! you are found out. And this, my dear Mr. Woodvil, this is not the worſt of his treachery. He is married already, and wants now to——

WOODVIL.

Married, Sir William?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

I ſay married: I can prove it. He thinks it a pro-profound ſecret, and he only wants to ſeduce your niece to her ruin. There is a friend for you!

WATCHIT. (aſide and laughing)

What a fine puzzle here is?

Sir WILLIAM.

Slander, calumny; I deny it all. I here declare—

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Don't hear him; he will deny this, like every thing elſe.

Sir WILLIAM.

Diſtraction! confuſion! will you hear me?

[Watchit talks apart with Woodvil, and both laugh.

Enter CLARISSA.

CLARISSA.

For Heaven's ſake, what is the matter?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Oh! I am glad you are come: take care of yourſelf: he is no better than he ſhould be: he means to rob you of your innocence.

CLARISSA.

Madam, I can never think ſo ill of Sir William.

Sir WILLIAM.

Generouſly ſaid, and I thank you. You are the only one of ſenſe among them.

WOODVIL. (aſide with Watchit)

I underſtand it now: but huſh!—no explaining; let it take its courſe. [Watchit and he laugh.

CLARISSA.

Sir William is incapable of an improper action, I am ſure he is.

Sir WILLIAM. (to Clariſſa)

I adore you more than ever.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Watchit, what do you ſtand laughing there for? —Step hither; come forward, I ſay. Did not you tell me, Watchit, that Sir William is married?

WATCHIT.

Sir William married! I tell you! law! Ma'am— [Burſts into a laugh.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

She did tell me, and I know it to be true. You can be a general lover, Sir William:—Mr. Woodvil, "he has a ſeraglio of ladies; and though he "rails at his ſon, he has gone lately and married "one of his Madams, as privately as he could, and "he thinks nobody knows it."

Sir WILLIAM.

There again now!

WOODVIL.

What a buſtle ſhe has made! (laughs)

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Mr. Woodvil, it is no laughing matter: Watchit has told me all: it is juſt as ſhe ſays; "he has married "his Dulcinea, and all his pretended love in a mo- "ment for your niece, is only to deceive her, ruin "her, poor dear young girl."

Sir WILLIAM.

All falſe, idle, abſurd: where are your witneſſes?

Mrs. WOODVIL.

There, I thought you would be at that work. "The whole pariſh knows it: but tenants are cau- "tious, and huſh-money goes a great way." Does not it, Watchit?

WATCHIT.

I know nothing, Madam; I remember nothing; I underſtand nothing; but I believe I ſhall crack my ſides with laughing: ho! ho! ho!—— [Exit.

Sir WILLIAM.

There; there; fled the pit!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

But I ſhall bring her back.——My deareſt Mr. Woodvil, it is a ſerious affair: take care of your niece: it is for the good of your family that I give myſelf all this trouble. I'll bring the girl back this moment. [Exit.

WOODVIL. (laughing)

Well, this is a curious miſtake.

Sir WILLIAM.

You allow it to be a miſtake?

WOODVIL.

This ſtory of your marriage, I believe, is without foundation: but your behaviour to my wife, and what I ſaw with my own eyes between you and the maid——

Sir WILLIAM.

All a miſtake too: but tell me plainly, Sir; am I to underſtand by this, that you evade giving me an anſwer, or that you don't approve of my aſking your niece in marriage?

WOODVIL.

I have not ſaid that. Win her if you can. That may ſhew that you have no unfair deſigns upon the reſt of my family. [Exit laughing.

Sir WILLIAM.

Deſigns upon his family! I hope, Madam, that in your thoughts I am honourably acquitted.

CLARISSA.

Of every unfair deſign it is my duty to acquit you.

Sir WILLIAM.

You make me happy; much happier than you imagine. Theſe fooliſh people have plagued and perplexed me to that degree, I ſhall hardly have common ſenſe this week to come. But I ſtill have ſenſe enough to know your merit. Your uncle conſents; you you heard him ſay ſo: and ſince our paſſion is mutual——

CLARISSA.

I ſhall ever reſpect you, Sir; but as to mutual paſſion——

Sir WILLIAM.

Nay, it is too late to throw a veil over it. Conſider; you have acknowledged it.

CLARISSA.

I have acknowledged the ſentiments I feel in behalf of your ſon: muſt he be ruined, Sir?

Sir WILLIAM.

Never throw away a thought on him: if he is undone, he may thank himſelf. It would be unnatural in you to plead too much for him and the children of his marriage.

CLARISSA.

Indeed, Sir, if his children are not happy, I ſhall be miſerable. [almoſt in tears.

Sir WILLIAM.

She ſpeaks feelingly for him. (aſide)—Po! this is all miſtaken generoſity. What have you to do with the fellow? Leave him and his wife to repentance and their own miſery.

CLARISSA.

But if by coming into your family, I bring calamity on any part of it—

Sir WILLIAM.

You are not to anſwer for that: it is my act and deed.

CLARISSA.

Can I conſent that you ſhould extinguiſh the natural affections of a father? What a load of calumny muſt I take upon myſelf? The malice of the world will never ceaſe to perſecute me. Let me, therefore, entreat you; drop your preſent deſign: your eſteem is all I aſk: upon that my happineſs is grafted. Could you but know half of what I feel! my heart is ready to burſt in your preſence: it is fit you ſhould be informed —This heart, Sir——

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide)

She alarms me:—go on; proceed.

CLARISSA.

This heart—it is no longer at my diſpoſal.

Sir WILLIAM.

I know it: you have reſigned it generouſly: Mrs. Woodvil told me ſo; you have given away the poſſeſſion of it.

CLARISSA.

I have, Sir; and it is never to be recalled. Mine is not a ſudden turn of inclination: it is a paſſion, to which ſentiment gave birth; which reaſon approves, and gratitude makes a duty.

Sir

Sir WILLIAM. (bowing reſpectfully and ſmiling) Madam! you are too good: you do me too much honour.

CLARISSA.

If I could be ſure that you will always think ſo—

Sir WILLIAM.

Rely upon me; I am fixed, unalterably fixed.

CLARISSA.

And will you forgive your ſon?—Oh! Sir William, if I had power of utterance to tell you but the half of what paſſes here—(laying her hand to her breaſt) If I could explain to you the intereſt I take in Mr. Loveworth's welfare—(turns aſide) Generous, generous Loveworth!

Sir WILLIAM.

Tears!—her generoſity is ſomewhat ſingular. This warmth of ſympathy for a ſtranger——

CLARISSA.

I cannot help it. Can I think of wadeing into your family through the tears of a ruined ſon?

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide)

She has got the day: ſhe has conquered.——I can reſiſt no longer. You have ſoftened me in regard to the fellow, though he does not deſerve it. Since you will have it ſo, I give up the point. I will ſee my ſon; I will forget, I'll forgive his folly. He ſhall be dedecently provided for. You ſhall have all the merit of bringing about this reconciliation. My whole family will be obliged to you. And now, ſince all your ſcruples are removed; promiſe me your conſent.

CLARISSA.

Thus much, Sir, I can venture to anſwer. See Mr. Loveworth; take him once more under your protection; reſtore him to your eſteem and regard; and as to his lady,—if her conduct gives her a claim upon your generoſity,—if ſhe has any of the true virtues of a wife to entitle her to favour,—only promiſe, when you have ſeen ſome proof of her merit, that you will then forgive her alſo,—do this, and I ſhall reverence you for the goodneſs you may extend to her.

Sir WILLIAM.

And then you promiſe me your hand? Do not heſitate.

CLARISSA.

When you have forgiven your ſon, and ſeen his lady, if you then perſiſt; if your reſolution does not change——

Sir WILLIAM.

Oh!—My reſolution can never change.

CLARISSA.

If you then continue in the ſame mind; if, when your family is ſettled, you think it proper to aſk me in marriage——

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

You will then conſent.

CLARISSA.

You ſhall, in that caſe, judge for yourſelf.

Sir WILLIAM.

Odſbud! you have made me the happieſt of men. I ſhall be as young a bridegroom as George himſelf.

CLARISSA. (aſide)

I dread the end of all this.

Sir WILLIAM.

I have not words to thank you. You have made me—but I'll ſay no more——when I am thoroughly happy, I am wonderfully given to talk nonſenſe—— loll toll loll. (ſings)

Enter WATCHIT, Mrs. WOODVIL, and Mr. WOODVIL.

WATCHIT. (laughing)

Oh! gracious! I ſhall die with laughing.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Now, Mr. Woodvil, now walk in: now hear what Watchit has to ſay.

Sir WILLIAM.

Wounds! the old exploded ſtory again?

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Hear what the girl has to ſay.

WATCHIT.

I have nothing to ſay, Madam. Ho! ho! ho!

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Nothing to ſay?

WOODVIL.

No; nothing to the purpoſe. I underſtand the whole.

Sir WILLIAM.

Your niece has conſented. She has impoſed certain conditions: I muſt ſee my ſon: ſhe inſiſts upon it, and I agree. It is all her goodneſs, and not his merit; and ſo I ſhall tell him.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

And will you let your niece marry him?

WOODVIL.

Do you be quiet. I am glad to hear this news, Sir William; and fortunately my friend George is now in the houſe.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

In the houſe, and I not know it? How long has he been here?

WOODVIL.

Po! no matter how long; ſince you are wrought

to

to this diſpoſition, Sir William——Watchit; deſire him to walk up ſtairs.

WATCHIT.

Yes, Sir. This is the luckieſt affair. [Exit.

Sir WILLIAM.

Mr. Woodvil, you are too precipitate.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Ay; precipitate indeed!

WOODVIL.

Will you diſobey the lady's commands? Clariſſa, enforce your authority. [talks apart with Clariſſa.

Sir WILLIAM.

Her commands are abſolute: let him come, ſince it muſt be ſo: ay, ay; let me ſee him.

CLARISSA. (aſide to Woodvil)

I tremble for the event.

Enter WATCHIT, and LOVEWORTH.

WATCHIT.

Mr. Loveworth, Sir.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

The very perſon I ſaw in the other room!

Sir WILLIAM.

There, there; ſhe is growing mad again!

Mrs.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Mr. Woodvil, if you will believe me——

WOODVIL.

I can't believe you; truce with this abſurdity. Sir William, here is your ſon, Sir.

LOVEWORTH.

To be thus admitted to your preſence—

Sir WILLIAM.

You owe it entirely to that lady's goodneſs. She is the beſt friend you ever had; that I can tell you.

LOVEWORTH.

I feel that truth too ſenſibly, and it ſhall be the endeavour of my life to convince her of my gratitude.

Mrs. WOODVIL. (looking at Loveworth)

I am ſure it was he, whom I ſaw concealed in the room. (aſide)

Sir WILLIAM.

If you are ever wanting in due reſpect to this lady, I ſhall quarrell with you again. For the preſent, I ſhake hands with you: and ſo all is well.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

He is the very perſon. Watchit, I am ſure of it.

WATCHIT.

Never mind it now, Madam. Won't you ſee your ſon's lady, Sir?

Sir

Sir WILLIAM.

She is in the houſe too, I ſuppoſe.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

No; that ſhe is not: that could not be without my knowing it,

WATCHIT.

I beg your pardon, Ma'am; ſhe is in the houſe. Introduce her, Mr. Woodvil.

WOODVIL.

Come; Sir William; you agree to ſee her? [To Sir William.

Sir WILLIAM.

You are all in a violent hurry, methinks. Oh! George, if you had choſen ſuch a lady as this. (pointing to Clariſſa) Do you deſire me to ſee his wife?

CLARISSA.

I don't know how to ſpeak on this occaſion.—— Thus on my knees I beg forgiveneſs for all that's paſt.

Sir WILLIAM.

Nay, don't kneel to me: let me raiſe you.

CLARISSA.

No, Sir: I have offended, and this poſture is the fitteſt for me.

Sir WILLIAM.

How! how is this?

CLA-

CLARISSA.

I am the unfortunate perſon that raiſed you indignation againſt your ſon.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

How! how! what does ſhe ſay?

Sir WILLIAM.

Do I underſtand her? Mr. Woodvil,——is your niece my ſon's wife all this time?

WOODVIL.

That lady is your daughter in law. We have impoſed upon you, for the good of your family; It was the pious fraud of friendſhip, and you will excuſe it.

Sir WILLIAM. (walking aſide)

The young profligate has made a good choice, and robbed me into the bargain.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

This cannot be. She is your niece, Mr. Woodvil, is not ſhe?

WOODVIL.

It ſerved the purpoſe to call her ſo.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

At this rate, I have been impoſed upon all this time. You are all in a plot againſt me. I am kept in the dark, and never am to know any thing in this houſe.

LOVE-

LOVEWORTH. (to Sir William)

You will allow, Sir, that I have not wanted diſcernment to make a proper choice.

Sir WILLIAM. (aſide)

I have a mind to quarrell with him again.—I have been bamboozled in this buſineſs. Mr. Woodvil, I appeal to you: am I bound to——

WOODVIL.

Abſolutely: and now if you can aſk the lady in marriage, ſhe, I ſuppoſe, will perform her part of the contract.

Sir WILLIAM.

So! that's the trick, is it?

WOODVIL.

You cannot recede from your word.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

Did not you tell me, Watchit, that ſhe was in love with Sir William?

WATCHIT.

It was my miſtake; but you ſee her love does not go out of the family.

Mrs. WOODVIL.

You ſhall tell me every ſecret: you know more; I know you do. (talks aſide to Watchit)

Sir WILLIAM.

'Sdeath! I have expoſed myſelf, and they have put it out of my power to find fault. Wounds! I could be in a paſſion again——And yet I have made myſelf ridiculous, and ſo to avoid being laughed at—

CLARISSA.

You perceive my confuſion, Sir: I was drawn into this ſtratagem, and I hope——

Sir WILLIAM.

Well, well; you have deceived me; and after all, it is an agreeable deceit.—But, you baggage! I ſhall ſcold you heartily hereafter for the trick you have played me.

WATCHIT. (aſide)

He is not the firſt man, whom love has made a reaſonable creature.

Sir WILLIAM.

You coquette! you jilt! you falſe one! I'll lampoon you in all the London papers; I'll write a ballad againſt you.—Can you look me ſtreight in the face after what has paſſed between us? George, you have rivalled your father; but I have forgiven you. As ſhe has been a flame of mine, take care that you behave well to her.

WOODVIL.

I will anſwer for him.

Sir WILLIAM.

It is all for the beſt perhaps. Don't laugh at me, that is all I aſk. And in return, I will fairly own an honeſt truth: when we become the cenſors of other people, we make ſevere laws againſt ourſelves.

WOOD-

WOODVIL.

Which laws we break upon the firſt occaſion that offers.

Sir WILLIAM.

Even ſo, Sir: and for my part, I now ſee clearly, that the beſt way is, to attend, in the firſt inſtance, to our own infirmities: we ſhall learn from thence, to make due allowance for the failings of others.

CLARISSA, comes forward.

YOU ſee, good folks, true to the Drama's law,
From theſe light ſcenes the moral which we draw.
Look round through life, you'll find the maxim true,
Each blames in others, what himſelf will do.
Juſt as the Turk doth from all wine refrain,
And yet with opium ſtupifies his brain.
E'en here, I fear, here on this very night,
There are who rail, themſelves not always right.

Pray now above, amongſt you gods on high,
To whom ſo oft I lift a trembling eye;
For whom I ſtrain theſe tender lungs, ſtill willing
To let you hear a little for your ſhilling;
Is there no cenſor there amongſt you, pray,
Who blames each new-born folly of the day?
'Gainſt foreign lace who doth his thunders lance,
Yet runs his brandy from the coaſt of France?
Is there no Falſtaff, fed with plenteous ſtore,
Who having ſpace enough, ſtill pants for more?
Aud while ſix ſeats he fills with ample make,
Cries, what a deal of room theſe people take?

What num'rous ſwarms in thoſe mid rows abide,
Moles to themſelves, to others eagle-eyed!
Each ſees his neighbour's back with follies groan,
But never ſpies the budget on his own.

One inſtance more: amongſt you here i'th' Pit,
Are there no bards, who like an Inqueſt ſit
On murder'd plays, and rave, and fret, and foam,
And DAMN this piece,—yet have a worſe at home?

This piece no critic here muſt dare abuſe;
For I inſpir'd it, I the poet's MUSE! *
From you, ye fair, he merits ſome applauſe;
His ſcenes were written in your ſacred cauſe;
To guard from wither'd age your beauty's prize,
And bid on nature's laws your conqueſts riſe.

Me could he teach this circle how to charm,
And give the pow'r your boſoms to alarm;
'Twere the bright point, at which my thoughts aſpire:
What more were left to fan ambition's fire?
She triumphs here, to whom your favour's ſhewn:
"There if I grow, the harveſt is your own."

* The piece was written for Mrs. Yates, and acted on her benefit night, in the month of March 1764.

NEWS

News from Parnaſſus.

AN

INTRODUCTORY PIECE,

Performed at the Opening of Covent-Garden Theatre

ON

MONDAY, the 23d of SEPTEMBER, 1776.

Tum canit errantem Permeſſi ad Flumina Gallum.

- VIRG.

The PERSONS.

BOCCALINI,	Mr. HULL.
RANTWELL, an Actor,	Mr. LEE LEWIS.
VELLUM, a Bookſeller,	Mr. WILSON.
REBUS, a Poet,	Mr. QUICK.
CATCALL, a Critic,	Mr. WHITFIELD.
FITZFROLICK, a Pantomime Poet,	Mr. WOODWARD.
LA FLEUR, Servant to Boccalini,	Mr. WEWITZER.
TWO CHAIRMEN.

Scene BOCCALINI's Lodgings.

News from Parnaſſus.

A violent rapping at the Street-Door; from the oppoſite Side, enter

LA FLEUR.

De people in dis country it is all mad—rap, rap, rap—knock a de houſe down! I wiſh I was again en Provence; (more knocking at the door) vat is you would have?—De law in dis country it give liberty; de liberty it is break a de head, break a de houſe, put Frenchman in de horſepond, vat you will. It is all mad for de news; (more knocking) and it will not wait till de news come. Ah ça, I muſt open door. (opens the door, and peeps out) Vat is you want?

PEOPLE without.

That odd mortal Boccalini, does he lodge here?

LA FLEUR.

Signior Boccalini, it does lodge here; but you cannot ſee him now; it has des affaires—(holding the door, and ſtruggling) it is not viſible to-day.

PEOPLE without.

We muſt ſee him; we muſt come in.

Enter RANTWELL and VELLUM.

RANTWELL.

Here's a foreigner without manners; won't let people in to pay a civil viſit!

VELLUM.

We have buſineſs with the old critic.

LA FLEUR. (ſtruggling at the door)

I will make faſt a de door. Ah! ah! no more come in. Vat is you command?

RANTWELL.

Your maſter is a queer odd ſort of a good kind of critic. Boccalini's advertiſements from Parnaſſus are well known. He comes, we hear, with news from thoſe regions, and we want to know what he has in his budget. Is not this he?

LA FLEUR.

Le voila! it is Monſieur. I am glad he is come; he underſtand your language, and will talk you himſelf.

Enter BOCCALINI.

BOCCALINI.

Your viſit is early, gentlemen, and ſomewhat importunate.

LA

LA FLEUR.

It is ſans ceremonie: come in ſpite of touts les diables.

BOCCALINI.

La Fleur, do you ſtep and put my books in order.

LA FLEUR.

Volontier: de gentlemen will pay you Englis viſit: how d'you do?—Vat news?—and dat is all. (ſings) Grand ſoleil— [Exit.

BOCCALINI.

Your name, Sir?

RANTWELL.

Rantwell, at your ſervice: you may read it in capitals three times a week in the play-bills.

BOCCALINI.

An actor, perhaps?

RANTWELL.

Righty gueſſed.

BOCCALINI.

And you, Sir?

VELLUM.

My name is Vellum: a bookſeller, Sir; well known in the Row. To refuſe me admittance, would have been an error of the firſt impreſſion.

RANT-

RANTWELL.

And I know my cue when to enter. Well, Signior, you have news from Parnaſſus, we hear.

BOCCALINI.

Yes, Sir; to be publiſhed when I have arranged my materials.

RANTWELL.

Kind and obliging! We have had nothing from thoſe parts a long time. Our Poets ſeem to have dropped all correſpondence with the Muſes.

VELLUM.

Ay; and we bookſellers are almoſt reduced to the neceſſity of writing for ourſelves. Now, Sir, if you will let my paper have the firſt of your news——

RANTWELL.

A little criticiſm will do no harm in the beginning of our theatrical ſeaſon.

BOCCALINI.

Patience, gentlemen. Seneca, Epictetus, and other philoſophers, have given me ſome papers of patience-powder, of more efficacy than all your quack medicines.

RANTWELL.

"The labour we delight in phyſicks pain." The truth is our poets are become news-writers, and the bookſellers are grown quacks.

VEL-

VELLUM.

Yes, there are bookſellers enough to put off your powders, and you may adverti ſe in my paper. In the mean time, Sir, your news.

RANTWELL.

Ay, true or falſe, give us the news.

BOCCALINI.

Why muſt you both ſpeak at once?

RANTWELL.

I hate to be ſilent in a ſcene.

BOCCALINI.

But the ſcene can't go on, if you won't hear. This gentleman excites my curioſity. (looking at Vellum) You print a newſpaper?

VELLUM.

I do, Sir.

BOCCALINI.

A newſpaper is an extraordinary manufacture, but I can form no idea of the proceſs. Bees make wax; worms produce ſilk; and ſpiders weave their webs: but what kind of animals engender a newſpaper is beyond my ſkill.

VELLUM.

You foreigners know nothing of the matter: we owe it all to liberty. How do you think it is done?

Boc-

BOCCALINI.

News from all parts of the kingdom! private intelligence from families! accounts from every quarter of the globe!—I ſuppoſe, to do all this, you have correſpondents abroad, who may be depended upon. If a ſudden event happens in a private family, they to be ſure give you notice.

VELLUM.

Not a tittle of this. A printing-houſe is like a bee-hive: ſome drones there are; the buſy fly and buzz abroad in a morning, and return loaded at noon: but they never bring enough; we ſupply the reſt. Troops in America! a letter from thence is writ in my garret. We have in the Merchants Directory, a full liſt of all the principal names in the city. Now in a dearth of news, we ſend half a ſcore to Tunbridge, another flight to Margate; a third group to Brighthelmſtone. We rob this man on the high-way; we kill another at a city-feaſt; and we ſtop payment for a great houſe, juſt as we like.

BOCCALINI.

And all falſe?

VELLUM.

Every ſyllable.—At the St. James's end of the town, we uſed to be hard put to it: but difficulties are now removed; their names are all on the ſtreet doors; we take them down in our liſt, and then deal with them as we like. We ruin the eldeſt ſon at play, and ſometimes ſhoot him: we raviſh the daughdaughter, put the mother to bed with the coachman, hang the father up in the ſtable, and make a Lord ſteal half a dozen tea-ſpoons out of a ſilver-ſmith's ſhop.

BOCCALINI.

Don't you obſerve ſome degree of probability in your ſtories?

VELLUM.

Oh! no; the incredible goes down beſt in this country.

BOCCALINI.

But won't the falſehood be found out?

VELLUM.

After ſome noiſe; our end is anſwered firſt.—A newſpaper, Sir, is a great ſchool of ſcience: moſt of the modern authors have never been at any other. With a good genius for lying, a tolerable ſtock of malice, a ſtore of envy, and not a grain of literature, they write in the Journals for three or four years; then ſet up for men of great talents, and from their garrets, or the Fleet, come forth novels, hiſtories, plays, eſſays upon ſpirit and matter, whole reams in praiſe of themſelves, and a torrent of abuſe againſt every ſpecies of merit.

BOCCALINI.

But the plough is defrauded by this.

VELLUM.

That may be: the ſtaining of paper is our object. Now to give you a true idea of the matter; no man can go out of town; or ſtay at home; or pay his tradeſmen, or not pay 'em; live or die, be or not be;

be; marry or continue ſingle; no lady can look handſome, be a good wife, a virtuous daughter, or an affectionate mother, but we in our paper turn all topſey turvey, right or wrong, true or falſe, no matter for that; we kill the living, bring the dead to life, and repreſent all juſt as we pleaſe.

BOCCALINI.

And poor truth all this time!

VELLUM.

Have a regard for truth, and ſtarve by it. The paper would be a blank: truth would not fill half a column of the paper. And ſo, if you pleaſe, there's room enough for your news from Parnaſſus: a good budget of ſcandal will have a run. I'll ſtand the brunt.

BOCCALINI.

And will you venture to publiſh defamation?

RANTWELL.

I think it's my cue to ſpeak now. I have been ſilent long enough I think. As to my friend little Vellum, he will dare any thing: his name is well known in Weſtminſter-hall.

VELLUM.

Yes, pretty well, I think. Two verdicts againſt me laſt Term; an Information to be tried next, and only for ſaying that a man of quality has got his mother with child.

BOCCALINI.

Such a trifle as that?

VELLUM.

I ſaid no more. But I laugh at law: I hate the King's Bench; and they know it: "woe to my Lord Chief Juſtice." I ſtood in the pillory two years ago.

BOCCALINI.

Indeed!

VELLUM.

I did: nothing in it. I told the mob in hand-bills that the liberty of the preſs was in danger; and they huzza'd, like the Portugueze at the burning of a Jew. The pelting was but ſlight.

BOCCALINI.

But the diſgrace! does any body ſpeak to you after it?

VELLUM.

They admire you: I went to the coffee-houſe without waſhing the eggs off my face. Look ye; you can't have a better publiſher: ſecrecy warranted; never give up an author; you may murder characters, and compliment yourſelf juſt as you pleaſe in my Journal.

BOCCALINI.

I underſtand you: Parnaſſus is invited to a ſhare in ſcandal and malevolence: you ſhall have my anſwer preſently. And now, a word with this gentleman.

RANT-

RANTWELL.

Ay, you have kept me here a long time, without a ſpeech; and that, let me tell you, is the hardeſt thing in acting.

BOCCALINI.

Then you ſhould ſtudy it. But come; you are an actor, and you profeſs to pleaſe?

RANTWELL.

Yes, Sir; I profeſs to pleaſe, and it is cruel in any newſpaper to ſay, I don't pleaſe. If idleneſs, or a party to Salt-hill, or a quarrel with the Manager, hinders me from ſtudying my part, why ſhould any ſcribbler inform the world of it? If I don't like my wife, or if I like another man's wife better, why is a printer, a dirty, ſnivelling, ſneaking fellow, like Vellum there—

VELLUM.

If you go to that, ſhall a paltry player——

RANTWELL.

A paper and type raſcal!

VELLUM.

A king of ſhreds and patches!

RANTWELL.

A mere bundle of fools-cap!

VELLUM.

A bluſtering, ranting, ſpouting——

RANT-

RANTWELL.

A duodecimo of waſte paper.

BOCCALINI.

Nay! friends but this moment, and now—

RANTWELL.

Let him give up the point then. Shall ſuch a fellow as that dine upon my follies? I hope, Signior, that you have an advertiſement from Parnaſſus, ordering, in the name of Apollo, that no newſpaper ſhall ſay a word of us, who depend upon pleaſing the public.

BOCCALINI.

And what ſay you of thoſe who profeſs to ſerve the public?

RANTWELL.

Why, as we very often pleaſe nobody but ourſelves, ſo your Miniſters as often ſerve nobody but themſelves; and therefore with quack doctors, money lenders, and lottery offices, they are all fair game.

VELLUM.

I like to hear actors talk of pleaſing the public!

RANTWELL.

Do you compare newſpapers to a theatre?

VELLUM.

Do I?—What do we print lies for but to pleaſe the public?

RANTWELL.

Print no lies of us: but come, let us hear your news: as Sir Harry ſays, the news! tell me news.

VELLUM.

If you don't tell, I'll invent news for you.

RANTWELL.

And now I think on't; Roſcius, you know, has left the ſtage; is not Shakeſpeare hugely angry?

BOCCALINI.

Angry?—At what?

RANTWELL.

At Roſcius, for retiring?

BOCCALINI.

No, Sir: Shakeſpeare retired himſelf to the banks of the Avon, and he wiſhes Roſcius a happy retreat on the banks of the Thames. Apollo has decreed him a laurel-crown for his ſervices, and has promiſed him a new wreath, ſhould he again appear for the theatrical fund, or upon any other occaſion.

VELLUM.

This is bad news.

BOCCALINI.

Why ſo?

VELLUM.

No abuſe in it: dull truth is a drug: I'll ſay in the the paper, that Shakeſpeare never thought him a good actor: he prefered Betterton, and Booth, and—

BOCCALINI.

He ſays the reverſe, and calls him his beſt commentator.

RANTWELL.

What better than Booth, Wilkes, or Cibber?

BOCCALINI.

He was much obliged to them all: they ſprung from Betterton, as in ancient times, many Hercules's grew out of one. But Roſcius has reverſed it: out of many theatrical Hercules's he made one in his own perſon.

VELLUM.

This will never do. There will be no diſpute about this: no pro and con: and pro and con is the life of a newſpaper. Eſſays, letters, ſquibs, paragraphs, epigrams——

BOCCALINI.

Then it is your intereſt to be in the wrong?

VELLUM.

You have hit the mark. It is the intereſt of every newſpaper in England to be in the wrong. If I ſay alderman Guzzledown went a ſwan-hopping, and tumbled out of a city barge into the Thames, and when taken up, all help was too late; then alderman Guzzledown's friends are in a rage, and they come to my houſe, and "alderman Guzzledown, Sir, does not underſtand"—and ſo then they put an anſwer in the paper, that he never went a ſwan-hopping at all, and I get ſomebody to abuſe the anſwer, with a hint about ſmuggling; and ſo a paper war goes on—— [a rapping at the door.

BOCCALINI.

More viſitors! if you will ſtep into the next room, gentlemen—whom have we here?

Enter REBUS.

RANTWELL.

Ha! little Rebus! Signior Boccalini, let me introduce my friend, Mr. Rebus, an admirable poet! He has writ a comedy. My dear Rebus, you are the man to revive a drooping ſtage. I hope you have a part for me. (turns to Boccalini) A poor ſentimental blockhead; I hope his play will never be received. My dear Rebus, if your piece comes out, you may depend upon me. Come, Vellum, they want to be buſy.

VELLUM.

If your play comes out, ſend the plot to my paper. You may praiſe yourſelf there, as much as you will: and I'll take care to abuſe you.

[Exit with Rantwell.

BOCCALINI.

You are a dramatic author, Sir?

RE-

REBUS.

I am Sir. My firſt puſh will be in comedy.

BOCCALINI.

And for this I ſuppoſe you have prepared yourſelf by an accurate ſtudy of men and manners: you have attended to the humours that gather in the mind, and the tinge thoſe humours are apt to give to the imagination. You have purſued affectation through all her ſhapes, and can open with a nice hand the vein of the ridicule that ſprings from that ſource. You have ſeen life, you know the foibles of the fair; the turns of vanity, pride, love, extravagance, and all the whims of faſhion. You know the relative duties of life, and——

REBUS.

At that rate, when ſhould I begin to write my comedy?

BOCCALINI.

At Athens they were forbid before the age of thirty. I make no doubt, but you have digeſted Ariſtole, and all the rules of your art.

REBUS.

A man might as well ſtudy the mathematicks. I truſt all to genius: the managers have enlarged the houſe: it holds more money than ever, and that is provocation enough for me.

BOCCALINI.

Will that do? A painter ſtudies the principles of deſign and colouring before he takes a pallet.

REBUS.

Look ye, Sir: you ſaw that fellow Vellum that went out there?—I wrote for five years in his paper. And that fellow, Rantwell, who is gone with him, he ſupplied me with orders to ſee the play. A bitter bad actor! he ſhall never ſpeak a line of mine. I have attended the firſt night at all new plays; I have watched effect; obſerved where the audience applauded; gave the plot in the papers, abuſed every ſucceſsful writer, and now have turned one of my own novels into a comedy. No wit, no humour in it!

BOCCALINI.

No?

REBUS.

Wit and humour are good for nothing but to make people laugh.

BOCCALINI.

A new notion this: what's your ſubject?

REBUS.

You ſhall hear:—My notion is that there ſhould be found doctrine throughout; in every ſcene good and generous ſentiments; riſing in a climax to ſome uſefull moral in every act.—Now obſerve—my firſt act ends with "honour your father and mother." II Act, "love your neighbour as yourſelf."—III. Act, "do as you would be done by"—IV. Act, "charity covers a multitude of ſins"—V. Act, "God ſave the king"—No audience can hiſs ſuch ſentiments.

Boc-

BOCCALINI.

They might as well hiſs "the practice of piety."

REBUS.

Juſt the ſame: my play is pathetic——

BOCCALINI.

A pathetic comedy?——

REBUS.

Yes, a pathetic comedy! the ſtory is ſhortly this. Sophy Goodchild is an amiable girl: ſhe has many lovers; Luteſtring, a mercer's prentice; Capias, an attorney's clerk; and Jack Indigo, a young merchant.—Her father was formerly church-warden, now old, poor, and ſtarving! he has not a morſel to eat. Sophy Goodchild ſees a baker's ſhop: ſhe reſolves, but after many ſoliloquies, to ſteal a two-penny loaf for her father. The young attorney ſees her in the fact, and being croſſed in love, he informs. Sophy is carried before Mr. Juſtice Locuſt. Mr. Juſtice Locuſt is a wine-merchant, who ſells bad law, and adulterate port to the whole pariſh. Miſs Sophy is brought before him: ſhe weeps; confeſſes the fact, and is committed to Newgate. Mr. Juſtice Locuſt makes out a warrant for the father, for receiving ſtolen goods, knowing them to be ſtolen: young Indigo takes their part, and young Indigo's father, whoſe whole delight in his counting houſe is to do good, raiſes a ſubſcription to make Sophy's defence. She is brought to her trial, and her father with her. She makes a ſpeech; the jury cry, and both are acquitted, ſhe marries young Indigo, and his father ſettles his whole fortune upon them, which you know is very generous and improbable: and ſo the audience go away crammed with ſentiment, and highly delighted with ſo pathetic a piece.

BOCCALINI.

Have the Managers received this comedy?

REBUS.

No; they are inſolent; but till they comply, I ſhall abuſe them, and every thing they produce.

BOCCALINI.

Had not you better turn your comedy into a tragedy?

REBUS.

No, no; I have a tragedy upon the ſtocks. An Eaſtern ſtory. I call it Nuncomar.—Nuncomar has forged the bond of Malachi Doſs, and ſo contrives to poſſeſs himſelf of his whole fortune, as ſoon as Malachi Doſs dies. Malachi Doſs has left a daughter, ſecretly in love with Gungabaſſen——Gungabaſſen fetches a walk at midnight near the Adawlut, with an arzee in his hand. The ghoſt of Malachi Doſs appears, and being of the Gentoo religion, gives a fine awfull relation of the Metempſychoſis. The ghoſt diſcovers the whole fraud, and how he lent his ſeal to be put to an arzee, to be ſent to the Nabob, NUTCHUM AL DOWLA, under whom Malachi Doſs had a forjedurree. Gungabaſſen tells all to the young princeſs; the intereſt grows warm, and Nuncomar is ſent to priſon: his wife is in great affliction, and this again heightens the diſtreſs. Nuncomar breaks out of the priſon priſon into the council room, and claims the privilege of an ambaſſador as Vakeel to the Nabob: then follow ſome ſpeeches about the rights of ambaſſadors, and the ſtatute of queen Ann is put into blank verſe. In the midſt of things the Nabob comes with all his whole army: a battle is fought and won: Nutchum al Dowla is brought in priſoner upon an elephant: Nuncomar is executed, and his wife, according to the cuſtom of the Eaſt, mounts the funeral pile, which is lighted up on the ſtage, and ſo the play concludes, with a moral againſt forgery, highly uſefull in a commercial country.

BOCCALINI,

Will the audience underſtand it?

REBUS.

Not a ſyllable: they'll ſtare like ſtuck pigs: I like to ſee 'em ſtare at a tragedy. And then by culling from Shakeſpeare a parcel of obſolete words——

BOCCALINI.

Obſolete words in dialogue, that ſhould be natural?

REBUS.

Yes, it is the rule for ſupporting the diction, in all poetry; particularly with reſpect to the drama. I ſhall give my countrymen ſomething beyond the reach of malice. (loud rapping at the door)

BOCCALINI.

Hey! more viſitors!

RE-

REBUS.

Well, I can ſtep into the next room, I ſhall finiſh my tragedy. Nuncomar will make 'em ſtare: with ſmart imps, and dapper elves, and goblins of the night, and the nurſing hours of the morning, I ſhall make work for them. (repeats)

Here Nuncomar with NIRONS from the Weſt,
There Gungabaſſen marſhals all his NAIMANS;
And ſits aloft in thunder and in clouds!
Hey!—little Rebus will do it! [Exit.

Enter CATCALL.

CATCALL.

Ha! old boy!

BOCCALINI.

Your name, Sir?

CATCALL.

Catcall: a critic; and as you are of the ſame trade, I am come to have a little talk with you.

BOCCALINI.

Upon what ſubject?

CATCALL.

The reformation of theatrical abuſes.

BOCCALINI.

The true province of criticiſm!

CATCALL.

Yes, Sir: I was born a critic. I hiſſed the moment I ſaw the light. I rejected all play-things, till a catcall was put into my hand: that delighted me. When I took to my horn-book, the firſt letters I learned were, D, A, M, N, which make the word Damn you know. From ſchool, I came upon town; lounged at coffehouſes, read magazines, laid down the laws of the drama at George's, and pronounced upon wit at the Bedford.

BOCCALINI.

Good materials for a critic! now to the point.

CATCALL.

If you pleaſe, Sir: the affair is this. The Managers are grown inſolent: now I ſhall ſet my face againſt all inſolence.

BOCCALINI.

Proceed, Sir.

CATCALL.

Time was, I could go into the boxes and ſee an entire act of a play for nothing. At the cloſe of the act, the box-keeper came in, "I hope your honour likes the piece, and if you ſtay,"—Stay, ſays me I,—to ſee a play murdered? Up I get, and bruſh away to the other houſe, and there do the ſame. Now this good ancient cuſtom has been ſome how taken away. It muſt be revived. I know a cabinet-maker that has no buſineſs; I know a diſcontented maſter-taylor, who can bring all his journeymen into the upper-gal-gallery. We ſhall call ourſelves the town. No trifling with our rights. And now, Sir, I hope that you will by an edict from Parnaſſus revive the good and ancient privilege of ſeeing an act at each houſe for nothing.

BOCCALINI.

And is this all you have to complain of?

CATCALL.

No, no, have patience; this is not all. The town has been abridged of many privileges. For inſtance now; after ſeeing two acts, without paying a farthing, it then draws near to half price, you know. Then ſuppoſing me willing to pay, I could march behind the ſcenes; ſee all their thunder and lightning; ſtrut into the Green-room, and by talking to the performers make them all forget their parts, and then, lolling with a janty air againſt the ſide of the ſcene, hiſs the actors for their negligence, and laugh the ladies in the boxes out of countenance.

BOCCALINI.

This muſt make great confuſion.

CATCALL.

Charming confuſion!—A babel of ſounds. Off cries the pit; throw him over ſays the gallery; muſick, a hornpipe, prologue; roaſt beef. All this is loſt now.

BOCCALINI.

And this is what you would reſtore?

CAT-

CATCALL.

I fear we ſhall not be able to carry the point: but it will breed a riot, and that, you know, is rare ſport. [a rap at the door.

Enter LA FLEUR.

BOCCALINI.

What is the matter now?

LA FLEUR.

De gentleman in de chair. He will not come out. He has great myſtery; and ſo de chair it muſt be carry in here.

BOCCALINI.

As he pleaſes. Mr. Catcall, there is company in that room to entertain you.

CATCALL.

Let us firſt diſcuſs——

BOCCALINI.

Sir, my time——

CATCALL.

And, Sir, my time is precious.

BOCCALINI.

You ſee I am not at leiſure.

CAT-

CATCALL. (retiring)

A word, and I have done.

BOCCALINI.

How inconſiderate! leave me now.

[Exit Catcall.

(A Chair is brought in)

I. CHAIRMAN.

Will I lave the chair in the hall here?

II. CHAIRMAN.

What better place? Did not the gentleman deſire it? Ow! come along, man.

[Exeunt Chairmen.

BOCCALINI.

What can this mean?

FITZFROLICK. (looking out of the chair)

By ourſelves, I hope.

BOCCALINI.

The coaſt is clear, you ſee.

FITZFROLICK.

Then I'll venture out. (comes out of the chair; a large red cloak on him, and a tie wig.)

BOCCALINI.

By his appearance this ſhould be a doctor of phyſick.

FITZ-

FITZFROLICK.

No, Sir, I have no noſtrums: my name is Fitz-frolick.

BOCCALINI.

And your profeſſion?

FITZFROLICK.

A pantomime poet.

BOCCALINI.

A pantomime poet! what may that be?

FITZFROLICK.

You may well aſk. the ancients had but an imperfect notion of it: I can tell the whole ſtory of Ovid's Metamorphoſis better than Ovid himſelf.

BOCCALINI.

Better than Ovid! is the Engliſh a better language than the Latin?

FITZFROLICK.

We never uſe any language. Significant dumb ſhew is our method. How would you tell a man, without ſpeaking, to bring you ſome cherries? (mimicks) Nuts? (mimicks) Does any language come up to that?

BOCCALINI.

The critics can't find fault with your ſtile: pray, Sir, how did you attain this excellence?

FITZ-

FITZFROLICK.

I was bred a carpenter.

BOCCALINI.

A carpenter!

FITZFROLICK.

Yes: I built a booth for a puppet-ſhew-man in the country, and ever ſince I have been a dealer in pantomime. I have made all the heathen gods and goddeſſes. The chairs, that danced a jig in Dioclefian, were my handy work.

BOCCALINI.

An ingenious contrivance!

FITZFROLICK.

A better ſet of actors were never put out of hand. I have been a ſlave to the drama ever ſince, and I have ſuffered much inconvenience in the cauſe. Would you believe it? I have never been able to ſtay a week in any one lodging for theſe twenty years.

BOCCALINI.

Why ſo?

FITZFROLICK.

I practiſe all my pieces at home. The life of pantomime, you know, conſiſts in the eſcapes of Harlequin. I have bored holes in the doors and wainſcott in every houſe I could get into. I once got into a ſad ſcrape. Pantaloon was in purſuit of me—that is you muſt ſuppoſe ſo—I jumped through the wainſcott, ſcott, and tumbled into my landlady's bed; but that ſulky ſcoundrel her huſband baſtinado'd me, till I thought I never ſhould take a leap again. I have been practiſing all the morning: ecce ſignum!

[throws off his long cloak, puts on a maſk and appears in a harlequin-dreſs.

BOCCALINI.

A quick metamorphoſis!

FITZFROLICK. (friſks about.)

I may unmaſk to you. I have been practiſing a new pantomime. "Harlequin Argonaut, or the Golden Fleece." I ſhall lower the ſtage; make a fine baſon; get the New River company to turn in their water; and then I ſhall launch a ſhip, and ſail away for Colchos.

BOCCALINI.

But why real water in ſcenes merely artifical?

FITZFROLICK.

I'll tell you: I tried it with a canvaſs-ſea; but while the men were turning the wheels to give undulation to the drapery of the water, I fell in and almoſt broke my rib againſt the ſharp corner of a wave. So I intend to have real water.

BOCCALINI.

But in real water you may chance to be drown'd

FITZFROLICK.

No, no; that can't be. The ſociety for curing drowned perſons is to attend in the front boxes. I ſhall ſail away, do you ſee, for Colchos, and upon my arrival fire a broadſide at the caſtle, ſilence their guns, and——

BOCCALINI.

Guns! they were not in uſe.

FITZFROLICK.

Oh! harlequin deals with the devil you know. I meet Medea on the ſhore, and take her that night to Vauxhall.

BOCCALINI.

Vauxhall in thoſe days?

FITZFROLICK.

I am maſter of my own creation. I then take her to the Boulvards at Paris; give her a Dutch fair upon the ice;---I make my ice of tin.---Pantaloon, her father, with a long noſe, a grey beard, and a knife in his hand, purſues me: præſto paſs, I have a baſket on my ſhoulder. "Buy any muffins? Muffins for "coffee and tea, gentlemen and ladies."

BOCCALINI.

Nothing of this in Ovid.

FITZFROLICK.

My changes are more wonderful than his. My wit is full as ſurprizing: though, I think, my wit is not above five feet high at preſent.

BOCCALINI.

Wit five feet high!

FITZ-

FITZFROLICK.

No; I could ſpring ten-feet formerly; but a five bar gate is the height of my wit at preſent.

BOCCALINI.

So! you are vulnerable in the heel?

FITZFROLICK.

Yes, Achilles for that. I ſhall give great variety. I have hunted all the ſigns in London for animals that never exiſted: I ſhall give 'em all. ASTLEY ſhall ride his horſe; a Turk ſhall mount the rope; I have ſpoke to the ſtationer for a large quantity of ſnow, and you will have oſtriches, ſerpents of the Nile, the Ægyptian pyramids, and I change myſelf to a Mummy.

Enter all the former Characters.

RANTWELL.

Hey! that fellow intrude himſelf here!

REBUS.

That enemy of wit!

RANTWELL.

He never gives me a line to ſpeak.

CATCALL.

Turn him out.

VELLUM.

A ſcoundrel that never prints his works!

OMNES.

Turn the fellow out. (Fitzfrolick runs about, and leaps through a window)

BOCCALINI.

I am glad to be rid of him. I have no rules for his ſpecies of the drama. And now, gentlemen, you men, in your turns, hear the decrees of Apollo and the muſes. The public ſhall have them ſoon in my old way; in the form of advertiſements from Parnaſſus. In the mean time, to our preſent purpoſe. Mr. Vellum——

VELLUM.

I will print for you in a good type.

BOCCALINI.

Liſten, Sir, if you pleaſe. A year's collection of newſpapers has been peruſed by Momus, and he has made his report. They exceed in bulk all the writings of antiquity put together, and they make a curious medley. The works of the ancients were called the phyſick of the ſoul: modern newſpapers are the poiſon. Apollo leaves the ſuperintendance of this matter to Engliſh juries. He ſays, when a ſet of libertines, from the people called the LOCRIANS, broke into a temple, after a night's carouſal, and defiled the altar; an edict was paſſed at ATHENS declaring it lawful for the LOCRIANS to defile the temples: In like manner, Parnaſſus allows the newſpapers to traduce and vilify whom they think fit. The temples in Greece continued ſacred, in ſpite of indecency; and the valuable character may bid defiance to ſcurrility.

VELLUM.

Look into Poets Corner next Saturday for an epigram upon yourſelf.

BOCCALINI.

Mr. Rantwell, you profeſs to pleaſe; ſtudy to do it. Let actors write no verſes on themſelves, no paragraphs againſt their rivals; avoid frivolous diſpute, and attend to their buſineſs. If the waſps of the newſpapers bite and ſting, remember that thoſe little envenomed animals are generally moſt buſy in the ſunſhine.

RANTWELL.

I'll tell this in the Green-room: It may do ſome good.

BOCCALINI.

Mr. Rebus, a comedy was meant to be the mirror of life. "The proper ſtudy of mankind is man." True comedy ſerves that purpoſe: it helps to develope the diſcriminations of character, and to laugh folly out of countenance. Pathetic comedy is a mere ſubſtitute for wit, humour, and the powers of ridicule. Fuſtian tragedy is another ſubterfuge. Shakeſpeare wrote naturally: his language, in all his beautiful paſſages, is the language of this hour. Why ſhould you write, as if you was born two hundred years ago? The antique caſt is a mere trick in writing. Imitate nature; be ſimple, without meanneſs; adorn-adorned, without oſtentation; touch the heart, and that is your ſure road to ſucceſs.

REBUS.

I appeal to poſterity.

FITZFROLICK. (in the chair.)

Any directions for me?

OMNES.

Hey! he here again?

BOCCALINI.

There is no keeping him out, I ſee.

CATCALL.

He ſhall decamp for all this: here, call in the chairmen.

Enter Chairmen; as they are going to take up the chair, it flies open, and diſcovers an Apothecary's ſhop; an Alligator comes out; Harlequin is dreſſed as a Quack Doctor. The Alligator moves about the ſtage.

CATCALL.

What monſter have we here?

REBUS.

A deſcription of it in good blank-verſe will do well in a tragedy.

VELLUM.

I ſhould like a print of it for the next Magazine.

RANT.

RANTWELL.

"An alligator ſtuft: a beggarly account of empty boxes."

BOCCALINI. (when the alligator ſtops.)

Mr. Fitzfrolick, this is a ſpecimen of your talents. Your ſpecies of compoſition eludes all precept. Will a little common ſenſe do you any kind of harm?

FITZFROLICK.

Shall I be plain with you? I have tried various ſhapes to gratify my maſters. An old ſervant, Sir! within the limits of common ſenſe, I hope, my endeavours have not been always unworthy. I have occaſionally been prodigal enough to depart from nature; but I have had the grace to return. To pleaſe has been my ambition; and ſometimes truſting to my HEAD, and ſometimes to my HEELS, I have reached the chearful evening of life; and if my patrons will now and then continue to beſtow a ſmile, it will chear me on the reſt of my way.

BOCCALINI.

Fairly ſpoken, and I dare ſay you will have your wiſh. Mr. Catcall, a word with you, Sir. Baniſh noiſe and riot: let critics have knowledge and candour. A true ſon of Apollo has well obſerved, that the firſt office of criticiſm was to beat time to the chorus of the muſes, not with clamour and violence to interrupt the ſong. Let audiences ſupport the decorum of the theatre. Let the managers procure novelty, by a due encouragement of genius. If new plays of value cannot be had, let them revive the old, but be ſparing of alterations. They may lop lop excreſcencies, and remove indecency; but the form in which the fathers of the drama left their works, ſhews their own frame of thought, and ought to be reſpected. In a word, let Managers conſider themſelves at the head of a great warehouſe; procure the beſt aſſortment of goods, get proper hands to diſplay them; open their doors, be civil to the cuſtomers, and, Apollo foretells that the generoſity of the public will reward their endeavours. [Exeunt omnes.

END OF VOL. IV.

00043814

Due Date
10-2-67

Digitized with financial assistance from the Government of Maharashtra
on 25 June, 2016